Roosevelt Puts Nonwar Economy Up To Congress

Legislators Alone Must Decide Which U. S. Activities Are Essential, He Says

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday laid at Congress' door responsibility for making cuts in nonwar governmental activities in the interest of economy for the coming fiscal year.

By citing specific examples, he pointed out that Congress faces two problems in this regard—what are nonwar activities and how much can they be reduced.

The President stated that steady and continuous cuts have been made in the last two years and will continue to be made, but that he did not think the people would be especially interested if anyone wanted to argue about it. During the past year, nonwar expenditures have been reduced one billion dollars, he said.

What Is Nonwar Activity?

The discussion of governmental economy developed at the President's regular press conference after he disclosed plans to start work on his impending budget and the "state of the Union" message to Congress today. He said he would deliver the message in person on January 7.

He said that he was not sure he knew what a nonwar activity was and asked how some people get what way about the subject.

Hypothetically, he asked whether Federal inspection of meat destined for home consumption was a nonwar activity or not. He said that he did not know.

Government efforts to control the white pine blister rust is a nonwar activity, he said, but he pointed out that the rust, if unchecked, would result in hundreds of millions of dollars worth of damage to our lumber resources over the next 50 years.

It is up to Congress to say whether this activity is necessary in time of war, he said.

Antitrust Unit, for Instance

Asked how he felt about reducing appropriations for the Department of Justice's antitrust division, he recalled that antitrust laws have been on the statute books for over half a century, and that both major political parties have been on record as opposed to monopolistic practices.

If Congress should decide to deprive the division of funds so that it could not enforce the anti-

Plant Chemicals Kill 3 Workers, Sicken 120 Others

White Plains, N. Y., Dec. 29 (AP).—The fatal poisoning of three war workers from chemicals with which they were working and the illness of approximately 120 other workers, "some so badly affected before preventive measures were taken that they may die," was disclosed tonight by Westchester County health officials.

Richard McLaughlin, Sanitary Commissioner for the Westchester County Health Department, said that two of the persons dead were employed at the Anaconda Wire and Cable Co. plant, Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y.

The third death was that of an employe of the Habirshaw Cable and Wire Corp. in Yonkers, N. Y., Eugene F. McGillian, Health Commissioner for the City of Yonkers, reported.

All 120 of those who McLaughlin said "may die" were working at the Anaconda Plant. He said they are "off work," but did not disclose how many, if any, were hospitalized.

Ursula Parrott Is Accused Of Helping Soldier to Desert

By the United Press

Miami, Fla., Dec. 29.—Ursula Parrott, 40-year-old author and screen writer, was arrested here tonight on a Federal warrant charging her with aiding a soldier to desert the Army.

The soldier, Pvt. Michael Neely Bryan, 22, previously had a warrant issued for his arrest in connection with a narcotics violation in New York State, the Federal Bureau of Investigation reported.

A warrant for Miss Parrott's arrest was served by United States Marshal A. L. Gates when the author surrendered Bryan, whom she previously had helped escape from an Army stockade at Miami Beach, to the Federal Narcotics Bureau here late today.

The warrant charged that she "did unlawfully aid one Pvt. Michael Neely Bryan, a soldier in the military service, to desert therefrom and did harbor, conceal, protect and assist said soldier in said desertion."

It was learned from authorities at the Miami Beach Army Air Forces technical training command that Bryan, whose home was believed to be in Germantown, Tenn., had been confined to the stockade at the time of his escape for being absent without leave.

According to the Army spokesman, Miss Parrott arrived by plane from New York last Wednesday and had visited the soldier several times.

Flour Price Raised, Bread Control Begun

Ready-Sliced Loaves, Other Baking Frills To Be Eliminated

Government regulations finally reached the staff of life yesterday, as the Office of Price Administration authorized a 10 per cent increase in the price of flour and the Department of Agriculture ordered bread production simplified to absorb the extra cost.

At the same time, Food Administrator Claude A. Wickard ordered all white bread enriched with essential vitamins and minerals as a national health measure.

The price adjustment—made necessary to guarantee farmers parity for wheat—placed flour under specific dollar and cents ceilings at the processor level for the first time, and increased the cost of flour to consumers 40 to 75 cents a barrel and to bakeries 25 to 97 cents a barrel.

Earlier, at Chicago, in anticipation of the increase, all deliveries of wheat rose to new high levels for the season. (See story on Page 19.)

Restriction Ordered

The bread simplification order was the first issued by the Agriculture Secretary in his capacity as food administrator.

The following changes may be expected in the operation of the baking industry as a result of the far-reaching orders of the two agencies:

Slicing of bread will be eliminated after January 28, when the agriculture order takes effect.

Large loaves—over 2 pounds—may be sliced for institutional users for an additional 60 days only.

Bakers may make for sale in retail stores no more than six varieties of machine-molded bread, ten varieties of hand-molded bread, and three varieties of rolls in any one week. Similar restrictions on varieties were ordered for bread made for sale to institutions, restaurants, etc., and for direct sale to consumers.

Fancy "twisting and cross-panning" of bread will be stopped.

Wrappings will be limited to one thickness of paper in a move to save critical wax paper.

What wrappings are still allowed were ordered simplified, with printing held to a mini-

New Rationing Requires 15 More Forms

150 Million Food Books Important Part Of Huge Printing Job

OPA Gives Details

CONCISE DETAILS on the rationing of fuel oil, coffee, sugar, gasoline and other goods were released yesterday by the OPA. Story on page 7.

Only the Beginning

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Writer

Approximately 15 new forms, most of which are now being printed, will be placed in circulation for rationing of canned, frozen and dried fruits and vegetables, the Office of Price Administration revealed yesterday.

This tremendous job of printing, a job whose magnitude is not even yet fully known, was given by an OPA spokesman as being in part responsible for the inability to establish a definite date when rationing will go into effect. It is expected that the new program will become effective some time in February, the exact date depending largely upon completion of the printing order.

Of the 15 forms to be required, 9 will have to do directly with dealings between consumer and retailer. The remaining half dozen or so will be for use of retailers, distributors and processors in replenishing stocks diminished by consumer purchases.

Most important of the forms will be 150 million War Ration Books No. 2, containing blue point coupons for canned goods and red

Touhy Gang Smashed as FBI Slays 2

G-Men Spring Trap On Leader and 4 Others Wanted in Illinois Prison Break

By William J. Conway
Associated Press Staff Writer

Chicago, Dec. 29.—An ingenious trap, devised after weeks of careful planning and operated by the Nation's top ranking Federal agents, snapped shut today on Roger Touhy and Basil (The Owl) Banghart.

The coup and a similar snare sprung six hours earlier resulted in the capture of Touhy, Banghart and Edward Darlak, brought death via gun battle to James O'Connor and St. Clair McInerney, and completed the roundup of the seven long-term convicts who shot and slugged their way out of the Stateville, Ill., penitentiary 80 days ago.

Thus, in two swift, melodramatic maneuvers, the law smashed the revived "Terrible Touhy" Gang—listed by FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover as "the most vicious and most dangerous the country has ever had."

Hoover, who directed the pick of his G-man corps in the operations, reported the trap set for Touhy and his two confederates probably was the most elaborate ever arranged.

The time was 5 a. m. The scene was a six-flat building at 5116 Kenmore Avenue, in a North Side residential neighborhood. Touhy, Banghart and Darlak slept in one of the apartments on the first floor. Federal agents waited in a suite across the hall. Others, carrying machineguns and high-powered rifles, were stationed on the roof and across the street.

Flood lights were set in place. A loud speaker system was in-

Withdrawal Held Discretionary; Enemy Hard Hit At Other Points

By the Associated Press

London, Dec. 29.—Allied troops have withdrawn from a hill 6 miles northeast of Medjez-el-Bab on the road to Tunis "after inflicting severe casualties on the enemy," while Allied fighter planes striking clear across southern Tunisia blasted and set afire 20 Axis troop and supply trucks near the Libyan frontier, a communique said today.

The withdrawal was believed to be a discretionary move. During a lively Christmas Day battle in which the Allies captured most of the ridge, the Germans were not dislodged from the topmost heights, and the disadvantages of the inferior position, coupled with adverse weather conditions, may have made the ringside position precarious.

A delayed dispatch from southern Tunisia said American troops had raided Maknassy, only about 40 miles from the eastern coastal road linking Tunisia with Marshal Rommel's Libyan forces, capturing 21 Italians and killing and wounding many others. The mission was completed after sharp street fighting and the reduction of numerous sniper positions.

Important Road Cut

Berlin acknowledged this threat to its coastal road by announcing that United States troops had rolled into Gafsa, about 40 miles west of Maknassy.

French troops also were threatening to cut the Axis Tunisian forces into still another segment by continued blows in the Pont-du-Fahs area, only 30 miles south of Tunis and about the same distance from the eastern Tunisian gulf of Hammamet.

French headquarters in Tunisia said French troops, backed by Allied tanks and planes, had cut an important road south of Pont-du-Fahs after a fierce dawn battle today, and that the enemy had been cleared from the area. Foreign legionnaires were credited with a great share of the fighting.

But a later French communique said the enemy counterattacked violently during the day in the Pont-du-Fahs zone and made a slight advance "at the cost of heavy losses" at one point. The Germans were repulsed elsewhere in the area, and 50 German dead were counted in one sector held by French troops, the communique said.

Tunis Hit Again

Russians Seize Great Quantities Of Arms in Fall Of Kotelnikovski

By Eddy Gilmore
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Wednesday), Dec. 30.—Russian troops have captured Kotelnikovski, 90 miles southwest of Stalingrad, in the onrushing effort to reach Rostov on the Sea of Azov and trap a million-man German army stalled in the Causasus and before Stalingrad.

A special Soviet communique issued early today announced tersely:

"Our troops occupied the town and railway station of Kotelnikovski. Large trophies were captured, among which were 17 planes and a convoy of tanks."

The regular midnight communique also announced the capture of Torgovaya, 57 miles southeast of Kotelnikovski and about 40 miles above Elista, provincial capital in the Kalmyck steppes of the Caucasus.

Believed Nearing Junction

Thus one of the great goals of Russian winter strategy had been achieved on the basis of additional information here. The capture of Kotelnikovski was a further blow to the Nazi hope of rescuing 22 divisions which the Russians say are trapped between the Don and Volga Rivers north of Kotelnikovski. Other Red Army units have been hammering these 300,000 Nazis from all sides for weeks, steadily driving wedges into their hedgehog positions and virtually severing all their supply routes save by air transport.

Far to the northwest, Soviet troops that crossed the middle Don and veered southward toward Rostov were believed to be nearing a junction with those in the Kotelnikovski sector. It is said such a union would throw a second Red army ring around the 22 Nazi divisions. And if these two Soviet columns converge at Rostov an even greater German army would be cut off in the Caucasus, the Russians said.

The middle Don offensive already has surrounded Millerovo on the Moscow-Rostov line and has bypassed that town in the drive toward Rostov. The Russian troops churning through snow and operating under sub-zero temperatures were believed to be within 100 miles of Rostov on that town's northern approaches.

Fresh Nazi Reserves

The regular midnight communique that followed the special bulletin said the Russians had killed a total of 3560 Nazis and had captured 470 yesterday during the offensives on the middle Don and Stalingrad fronts. The Russians already had announced the killing of 19,000 Germans southwest of Stalingrad between December 12 and December 27, and a toll of upward of 120,000 Nazis had been claimed in the middle Don push.

For the second day the Russians said the Germans were throwing fresh reserves against their troops in the middle Don, but said these counterattacking Nazis had been repulsed and "our troops continued their offensive."

In the Stalingrad area where the Germans are reported trapped, the Russians said they shot down an-

Allies Reduce Stout Jap Force In Buna Sector

Aussies and Yanks Beat Off Savage Dusk Counterattack

By C. Yates McDaniel

Allied Headquarters in Australia (Wednesday), Dec. 30.—The Allied ground forces in northeast New Guinea reduced a Japanese strong point based on a triangle, containing 13 stoutly built and bitterly defended bunkers, then repulsed a Japanese counterattack at dusk to consolidate their positions on the left of the Buna line yesterday.

At the same time, American and Australian troops thrust from the right to widen their wedge along the coast.

Bypassed in an earlier drive toward the Buna government station, the fortified Bunker triangle, approximately 1500 yards inland from the coast, was enveloped by Allied infantry several days ago. The final reduction of this series of strong points followed the success of Allied tank and infantry units in cutting through to the coast and thence westward to the end of the main Buna air strip where the Allies last night were reported closing in on enemy pockets in the dispersal bay area.

A prolonged attack on Kavieng, in New Ireland, last night by Consolidated Catalinas featured the relentless Allied air assaults on Japanese bases in the southwest Pacific area. The Catalinas unloaded 250-pound detonation and fragmenta-

President Says He's Expecting De Gaulle Soon

Denies White House Request Delayed General's Visit

By Thomas E. Reynolds
Washington Bureau Chicago Sun

President Roosevelt said yesterday he expected to confer here very soon with Gen. Charles de Gaulle despite two previous postponements of the American visit of the leader of the Fighting French.

Simultaneously, the President revealed that the United States is rushing arms and munitions to all fighting forces in North Africa—American, British and Allied Frenchmen alike. He said that supply officials are doing their best to arm Frenchmen who are rallying to the United Nations cause in North Africa, combating a serious problem of procuring shipping space.

Cut Off From Supplies, Japs Face Starvation, Disease on Guadalcanal, Fighting Men Report

Foe a Weakened Mass of Troops Says Comdr. Dexter

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Japanese forces on Guadalcanal were reported authoritatively yesterday to be "very rapidly deteriorating"—transformed by six weeks of American blockade from a large, well-equipped and well-fed army into a somewhat scattered, weakened and starving mass of troops.

Word of the condition of the isolated enemy forces came from two sources, the former commander of the United States naval operating base at Guadalcanal-Tulagi, now returned to this country, and a Marine Corps combat reporter still on the scene.

Deteriorated Rapidly

Comdr. Dwight H. Dexter, 41-year-old Coast Guard officer and former Washingtonian, told reporters here of the weakening of the Jap force there.

He said that in early November the Japs had a very large, "well-fed, well-officered and well-equipped" force on Guadalcanal, but that the battle of November 11-15 had changed the situation greatly. Cut off from supplies, they have deteriorated rapidly, Dexter stated.

A reporter noted that there had been little heavy land fighting on the island recently.

"Judging from my experience there," he replied, "I believe the Japs right now have all they can do to combat starvation and disease, much less worry about the little bit of hell the Marines are giving them, too."

Commander Dexter left Guadalcanal early last month, but his observations were directly borne out by a dispatch from Sergt. James W. Hurlbut, of Arlington, Marine combat correspondent in the Solomons, released yesterday.

"Disease and lack of proper medical facilities are playing havoc with the enemy," Hurlbut wrote under date of December 7. "Recent Marine patrols have discovered scores of Japanese in bivouac areas who apparently died from disease and starvation."

Commander Dexter went to the Solomons with the original landing parties and was ordered home after 90 days there for a rest following malaria attacks. The son of the late Dr. E. G. Dexter, a Government official who lived for years at 1620 P Street Northwest, he will go to duty in San Francisco.

In an interview yesterday at the Navy Department, Dexter told of his experiences on Guadalcanal during the three months he was commander of the "naval operating base" there.

The base consisted of some 60 Higgins landing boats—left at Guadalcanal from the 350 such craft used in the original landing—and almost no wharfs or other shore facilities for receiving and handling supplies.

His boats performed a myriad of services—landing equipment from transports, carrying raider parties to attack the Japs, supplying outlying islands, and rescuing sailors and aviators from lost ships and planes.

Describing some of their jobs, Dexter told how on one occasion

Scores Discovered Dead in Bivouacs, Writes Marine

American planes reported some 200 men in the water believed to be from a sunken American destroyer. It was dusk, so rescue by boats was impracticable immediately, but airmen were sent over the area with all of the base's life preservers and most of their rubber rafts.

The next day, the boats went out—and brought in 150 Japs on the rafts, survivors of a sunken enemy destroyer. The life-preservers never were recovered, he said.

Captured Artillery

Dexter said that when the Americans landed on Guadalcanal they captured a number of 3-inch artillery pieces and antiaircraft guns, complete with emplacements and stores of ammunition. They were put to use by the Marines and are credited with many hits on submarines and planes.

Most of the fighting ashore on Guadalcanal, Commander Dexter said, has been at short range with the opposing forces firing at each other only 50 to 125 feet apart.

Japanese soldiers—the men in the ranks—show a complete lack of initiative when separated from their officers and noncoms, he said. On one occasion, a party stayed on a beach for several days under constant bombing and strafing, simply because no one told them to move.

"No one should get the idea, however, that the Japs are not competent adversaries," he added. "At times the Marines have had all they could possibly handle."

"Oldsters" Being Released

Teen-Age Draft Registration To Be Concluded Tomorrow

Youth, facing calls into military service, received advice from two sources yesterday, and from another came news of the future for Army men over 38 years of age:

All boys of 18 face classification as delinquents unless they are registered with selective service by tomorrow, District Selective Service headquarters announced.

College students, uncertain about military status and wondering what to do after the holidays, were advised to go back to school and stay there until actually called. That was the counsel of Dr. Francis J. Brown, consultant for the American Council on Education.

The War Department announced that men over 38 who have been on active duty in the Army are beginning to trickle back to civilian life to take over undermanned agricultural jobs and to produce vital war materials in factories.

District youths who reached 18 since June 30 had been assigned two days to register at high schools and local boards were open from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. Even so, Selective Service headquarters believes there still are some who have not registered. After the Thursday deadline delinquents face legal action.

The registration of the 18-year-olds (3500 to date) so far has fallen below District estimates, but headquarters yesterday said the pool of single men probably would fill draft quotas for several more months.

Married men without children will follow this group, but their

'Lost' 4 Days Behind Nazi Lines, Crack Unit Fights Way Out

By Wes Gallagher
Associated Press Staff Writer

Near Medjez-el-Bab, Tunisia, Dec. 26 (Delayed).—Seven miles behind the German lines, out of food, almost without ammunition and cut off from all means of communication, the Allied forces were being attacked continually and one of Britain's crack fighting units was given up for lost.

But today, four days after vanishing into the mountains toward Tunis, staggering from exhaustions, hungry and mud-caked, the first "lost unit" of the North African campaign fought its way back into the Anglo-American lines, unbeaten and carrying its wounded.

From the major, who had been twice reported dead on this front but who is a very much alive and fighting Yorkshireman as the second in command, the story of one of the most remarkable fighting exploits of this war was pieced together as the red-eyed but still grinning Tommies marched into a frontline command post.

Three days before Christmas the unit, with 55 mules, set out through the mud into the mountains held by the Germans. So boggy were the muddy slopes during the first night of creeping single file through the German lines, the men were able to average only 2 miles an hour.

"During the night I fell off into a ravine and was knocked unconscious," he related. "When I came to, the unit had gone. I decided

War Sidelights

Nazi Envoy To Spain May Be Recalled

London, Dec. 29 (INS).—The recall of German Ambassador von Stroher from Madrid will be announced shortly, according to a Stockholm dispatch to Reuter's news agency today.

The dispatch said the Nazi diplomat's return to Berlin will be ordered because the Spanish foreign minister, Serrano Suner, alleged to be pro-Axis, was replaced by Luis Jordana.

Japs Repair U. S. Dock

Tokyo (from Japanese broadcasts) Dec. 29 (AP).—Domei reported today that Japanese engineers had refloated and repaired an 11,000-ton United States floating dock which the news service said American forces scuttled last April at Port Marivales, Bataan.

Student War Loan

Johannesburg, Dec. 29 (AP).—Students who left school to serve in the armed forces of the Union of South Africa will be granted $200 in cash and a loan of $600, repayable in 15 years, to enable them to resume their studies after the war, the civil reemployment board announced today.

North African Air Ace

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Dec. 29 (INS).—First Lieut. Virgil Smith of MacAllen, Tex., today was considered the leading ace of the Twelfth Air Force in North Africa, having chalked up six air victories.

Yesterday he shot down a German Messerschmitt 109 in a dogfight over Tunisia. As far as it can be learned, no other American pilot in North Africa has duplicated his score.

Broadcasts to Resume

London, Dec. 29 (AP).—The Fighting French will resume their nightly broadcasts to France which were halted November 16 during Admiral Darlan's negotiations with the United States command in North Africa, Andre Philip, a member of Gen. Charles De Gaulle's Natoinal Committee, announced tonight.

The regular broadcasts were said to have been terminated in order to avoid embarrassing the British government with criticism of the Darlan deal.

War Frauds Unit Investigates At Wright Field

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

An investigation at Wright Field, the Army Forces, procurement division at Dayton, Ohio, has been launched by the War Frauds Unit of the Department of Justice, it was learned on high authority yesterday following reports of alleged malpractices which have been circulated for months.

An official of the Department of Justice, declining to discuss details of the investigation, was asked whether the unit's inquiry was confined to civilian malpractices. He replied that the Justice Department was looking into not only civilian affairs but those which might involve men of the Army.

Federal Bureau of Investigation agents recently visited the field, which is the nerve center of the Army Air Forces program and testing ground for virtually all types of its aircraft.

Revenues Action May Be Put Off Until April 1

Contrary to plans of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau to rush through the new Congress a multi-billion dollar war tax bill, both Democratic and Republican leaders plan to delay any action on revenue measures until after April 1.

This was disclosed yesterday as reports reached Capitol Hill that Economic Stabilizer James F. Byrnes was demandind that the Treasury abandon its repeated proposals for "reform" taxation and impose every type of tax possible for the sole purpose of obtaining revenues and thwarting inflation.

The reason congressional tax law writers want all proposals of the Treasury delayed until April 1 is to give them information of the reaction of some 50,000,000 income taxpayers to the new levies which will be collected for the first time on March 15.

Rommel's Protest On Lack of Support Prompts Removal

By the Associated Press

London, Dec. 29.—A well-posted foreign source said today that Nazi Field Marshal Albert Kesselring had been shunted from his air command in the Mediterranean to a post on the Don Front in Russia because of the Axis failure to halt the R. A. F. in Libya.

This source, who must remain anonymous, said Kesselring's reported removal followed complaints by Marshal Rommel that lack of proper air support resulted in the rout of his forces by the British Eighth Army.

Kesselring was said to have been succeeded by Field Marshal Erwin von Witzelben, who previously had been reported sent to North Africa to direct Vichy forces there before the Allied landings.

The report on Kesselring was the second recent indication that he had fallen into disfavor. The Moscow radio said on November 13 that Hitler had dismissed him for failure to tip off the Nazi high command on the Allied offensive in North Africa. The Germans themselves have issued no statement of any shifts on the Axis' African command.

This informant said the enemy set-up was not clear, but that Witzelben was believed now to command the whole southern European theater with Rommel in Libya and Maj. Gen. Walther Nehring in Tunisia as commanders on the two North African fronts.

Because of Italian demands that their home defenses be strengthened, this source said, the Germans are expected to send back at least part of the Italian troops on the Russian front, weakening the Axis in the east but building strength to face the new Allied threat from the south.

trust laws, that is a matter for Congress to determine, he said. He added that the antitrust laws had been enforced strictly by some administrations and leniently by others, to be polite about it.

In effect, the President appeared to be warning Congress to avoid making indiscriminate cuts in so-called nonwar activities—that he believed some of these activities were pretty important to the country.

The economy issue is expected to be of major importance in the forthcoming session of Congress. Senator Harry F. Byrd (Democrat) of Virginia, as chairman of the Joint Congressional Economy Committee, has indicated that his group plans to launch a strong economy drive which would encompass both war and nonwar agencies.

Likely to Ask Many Cuts

Reports have been current recently that the President's budget would contain recommendations for many significant nonwar economies that the Chief Executive believes justified. Along this line, he has already announced that he plans to discontinue the Works Progress Administration before the start of the new session.

Congressional attacks are expected to shift from the WPA, which ahs been a favorite "whipping boy" of the economy bloc, to such agencies as the Farm Security Administration and the National Youth Administration. However, it is understood that the Administration is attempting increased work for these agencies and others like it as complex manpower-control machinery gets under way.

U. S. Troops Overseas Permitted to Marry

London, Dec. 29 (INS).—American soldiers stationed overseas may marry if they receive their superior's permission, but will be court-martialed if they wed without that permission, United States Army Headquarters of the European Theater of Operations announced today.

Permission must be sought in writing two months before the intended wedding date, headquarters added.

British, Japanese Units Clash 25 Miles North of Vital Akyab

By the Associated Press

London, Dec. 29.—A clash between British and Japanese troops at Rathedaung in Burma, only 25 miles north of Akyab, indicated to military observers here today that Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell's Indian army was closing down firmly on that strategic city.

In addition to depriving the Japanese of a valuable base from which to bomb India, the capture of Akyab would give the Allies a good airfield from which to punish the enemy along the Irrawaddy River from Rangoon to Mandalay.

It was emphasized, however, that the clash at Rathedaung probably represented no more than a "large-scale raid" by Wavell's troops and that the main British offensive to recapture Burma and reopen the Burma road into Free China obviously had not yet begun.

Observers were inclined to discount a report by the Axis-controlled Paris radio that British troops already had penetrated the Chindwin River Valley east of the Chin Hills, which lie across a possible invasion road toward Mandalay. Recent communications from New Delhi, however, have mentioned vigorous patrol action in the Chin Hills.

In a statement today, Wavell said at New Delhi merely that his army was "getting every day into a better position to fight the Japanese consistently and successfully."

He explained that, theoretically, the Japanese occupied the whole of Burma up to the Chindwin River, but that in the recent hot weather they had withdrawn from the Kubo Valley, the tributary of the Chindwin, and that since then the area had been in British hands. He said the area was highly malarial.

"We did not live in it," Wavell explained, "although whenever we made contact with the enemy there we asserted ourselves. The fact that we have regained control of the Kubo Valley indicates that we are not sitting down."

It was believed here that an Allied eastward thrust from Akyab was highly unlikely because of a 5000-foot range of mountains that separates the area from Burma proper. The real test for Burma was not expected to develop until Wavell moves eastward and southward toward Mandalay, where the enemy is deeply imbedded.

'Lost' Unit Fights Way to Safety to try to get back to the lines and at dawn hid in the bush.

"I was less than 300 yards from a German battery and watched them all day. That night, almost the first thing, I ran into German patrols. They challenged me and I cut loose with my revolver and jumped into the rocks. They starte dshooting with everything, but I got away."

His unit continued to push on, out of communication with Allied lines because its radio had been smashed in a fall. Heavy rain made travel difficult but the men pushed on, although 10 mules died of exhaustion.

Near their objective, members of the unit shot up a German outpost. Earlier, the dense fog had lifted and the Allied fighters were spotted by the Germans. From their lofty mountain position the Britishers could see enemy forces preparing to attack them.

Shortly before midnight Christmas Eve the attack came.

"Our commander grabbed a rifle with the rest of us and we went to it," continued the major. "The Germans tried a winkling (bayonet) charge, but our lads stood firm and gave it to them and they fell back."

The three-hour attack ended at 2 o'clock Christmas morning.

With food and water gone and ammunition almost exhausted, the commander decided to withdraw. He calmly wished his officers a "Merry Christmas," then ordered them to lead the battalion in a fight through the German lines.

While the Germans laid down withering machine-gun fire, the badly exhausted unit—sleepless for three days—kept going through and around the enemy positions until the first groups stumbled into headquarters today. The wounded were carried on improvised stretchers.

The unit, which fought in France until Dunkerque and can trace its history to the Battle of Gallipoli, was among the first to land at Algiers in the Allied invasion of Africa.

One Victory Tax Problem Decided In Favor of U. S.

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Although detailed regulations covering the new and untried 5 per cent Victory tax of the Revenue Act of 1942 may not be completed until January 15, the Treasury Department, it was learned yesterday, has decided to resolve one knotty problem in favor of the Government.

Tax experts in the Treasury and in Congress see no reason why the "general tax rule" that taxable income is that "made available" in the taxable year, should not be applied to the Victory tax. And this view is expected to prevail.

Interest in any ruling to be made was particularly keen here due to the December retroactice pay raise recently voted for more than one million Government employes, checks for which probably will not reach the beneficiaries until January 1 is long past.

Those employes do not see why the 5 per cent tax should be deducted from their extra pay for December just because they get their checks in January.

Under the "general tax rule," in private employment also, a man on weekly payroll getting his check January 2 would have to pay the Victory tax for the full week because the wages were made "available" after January 1, while a person paid on a semimonthly or monthly basis would get a Victory tax payroll deduction for a longer stretch of December earnings.

Reds Capture Kotelnikovski, Key Rail Site

other 31 Nazi transport planes on Monday alone, and inside the besieged city the Russians gained from 300 to 400 yards, occupying several more wrecked buildings in the factory area and killing 300 Germans.

Heavy street fighting was the rule as the Russians drove on in the Kotelnikovski area, where Red army units also are striking wide of the captured city to shatter German strong points. More than 2200 Germans were killed in two engagements yesterday, the Russians said, and great quantities of abandoned German equipment were taken, including 415 trucks, 189 machineguns, 40 mortars and horses and cattle.

The active southern Russian front now extends some 300 miles from the edge of the Ukraine, just below the town of Rossosh, to a point near Ista.

In addition the midnight communique told of continuing Russian attacks southeast of Nalchik, below the Kalmyck steppes, where the Red army, however, appeared mainly to be consolidating positions.

On the central front the Russians still said they were gaining, too, although German counterattacks there have been sustained for some time. Two hundred Germans were killed near Velikie Luki, and two Nazi infantry companies were wiped out west of Rzhev. Three hundred other enemy dead were left on the snowy battlefield in an adjoining sector.

The army organ Red Star published photographs from the middle Don which illustrated the tremendous stores of military booty falling into Russian hands. One showed a Nazi military train loaded with five tanks standing beside a storehouse. Along the tracks were piles of munitions and other goods. Another showed a fleet of abandoned German trucks; a third some captured Nazi big guns and antiaircraft artillery.

Kotelnikovski Great Victory, Say British

London, Dec. 29 (AP).—A British military source said tonight that Russian capture of the key railroad center of Kotelnikovski means eventual extermination of what remains of Germany's Sixth Army around Stalingrad.

The Russian advance inflicted what British sources hailed as a "first-class defeat" for the harried Germans.

"The capture of Kotelnikovski is a most significant success which even the Germans will not be able to hide," said the British military source.

Second Group of U. S. Troops Reaches Dakar

By the Associated Press

London, Dec. 29.—The Morocco radio said tonight that a second contingent of American troops had just landed at Dakar, French West Africa, and had occupied the airdrome there, across the southern Atlantic from Brazil.

This was a development of French West Africa's decision to throw in her lot with the Allied cause. One contingent of American technicians and an Army-naval mission headed by Vice Admiral William Glassford, jr., arrived at Dakar last week.

An additional United States mission under the command of a rear admiral also has arrived in Dakar, the Morocco radio said later.

"It consists of technicians who are in complete agreement with the French local authorities who are devising a plan of military cooperation which will include in particular a utilization of airfields of French West Africa by American planes," the broadcast said.

"At the same time as the mission the new American consul general arrived at Dakar. Until now the United States consulate was headed by a consul. Its elevation to the rank of consulate general proves the importance which the United States attaches to Dakar. The new consul general knows France and French people well."

Governor Thanked

Dakar, Dec. 22 (Delayed) (AP).—The United States military mission in French West Africa today formally expressed its appreciation for the "hospitality and friendly reception which was received at the hands of his excellency the Governor General (Pierre Boisson) and from military, naval and air authorities of the colony."

The American group, headed by Vice Admiral William Glassford, reached Dakar December 19. The Glassford statement said:

"This is a military mission, the purpose of which is to explore the possibilities of cooperation between French and Allied authorities in order that the most effective action may ensue in the advancement of our common purpose: Defeat of the Axis powers and the restoration of France.

"Our French colleagues and we seek to bring together as quickly and effectively as possible the fighting resources of French West Africa and the military and industrial facilities of the United States, Great Britain and the other Allies.

"My conviction is that the mission will be able to insure measurable assistance for French land, sea and air forces in West Africa in our common struggle against the external enemies of France."

Red Guerillas Kill 47,000 Nazis

Moscow, Dec. 29 (AP).—The Moscow radio, describing the work of Ukrainian guerillas, said tonight that in recent months they had killed 47,000 Fascist officers and men, smashed 54 Nazi headquarters, wrecked 148 trains, smashed 2600 wagons, blown up 1400 motor trucks and motor vehicles, blown up 400 railway and road bridges, and destroyed 13 planes, 200 tanks and 18 depots of war materials.

Propaganda Lines From Finland Cut

By John A. Reichmann
United Press Staff Writer

The State Department yesterday summarily halted dissemination of Finnish propaganda in this country and simultaneously ordered the American Legation in Helsinki to cease similar activities in Finland.

The action followed by only a few days publication of the purported details of a Japanese-sponsored Pearl Harbor Day celebration in Helsinki at which high Finnish officials, including Premier J. W. Rangell, were said to have toasted the Jap sneak attack on Hawaii.

Releases to Be Stopped

The order means that the Finnish Information Service in New York is no longer permitted to send out press releases, books and pamphlets and that the press section of the American Legation in Helsinki will be abolished. The latter has been issuing news reports from the Office of War Information here.

While some observers interpreted the move as a new threat to Finnish-American relations, others saw it as an expression of State Department displeasure with the OWI for broadcasting details of the party back to Finland in the Finnish language while withholding official release of the story in the United States.

However, termination of the propaganda agencies is reminiscent of the progressive breakdown of relations between the United States and Germany and Italy. Then, as in the case of Finland, propaganda sources were dried up along with consular relations before diplomatic relations were severed.

Many Toasts Reported

The Pearl Harbor day affair was described as very gay. Information released by an authoritative source said there were many toasts, that a high Japanese decoration was bestowed on Rangell, and that certain Finnish officials congratulated the Japanese Minister following the showing of a motion picture of the Pearl Harbor attack.

Inquirers at the Finnish Legation here were informed that the details were highly exaggerated.

"The legation is in a position to state that the much publicized Japanese tea party followed the fashion of receptions that have been a social custom in wartime Helsinki," a spokesman said. "At many other legations, tea parties on the same pattern are given from time to time.

"No ceremonies of any kind and no banquet preceded nor succeeded the tea party, at which a film about the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor was shown to guests who were beforehand unaware of the program to be performed. No congratulations were addressed by Mr. Rangell or any other member of the Finnish government to the Japanese Minister, nor were there toasts drunk or cheers raised by them. (The reports had said that Finns lead the cheering of the film.)

"The presence of members of the Finnish government at social events arranged by foreign legations is not unusual in Helsinki and no political significance whatever is attached thereto.

"No decorations were awarded to Mr. Rangell."

Warship That Hit Reef Repaired, Knox Declares

Secretary of the Navy Knox said yesterday that very early in the war an American battleship had struck an uncharted reef but had long since been repaired.

The Secretary was asked at a press conference regarding reports that such a mishap had occurred, and he replied, "I don't think there's any harm in saying that in the very early stages of the war one of the battleships did hit an uncharted reef and was repaired a long time ago."

He gave no detail of the occurrence nor did he say where it occurred.

The reports about which the Secretary was told were that the incident had occurred in the South Pacific.

Roosevelt Goal Is Held Within Sight; U-Boat Toll Listed

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 29.—The American shipbuilding industry turned out in 1942 a record number of 750 merchant vessels, totaling eight million deadweight tons, to meet President Roosevelt's "blue-print for victory" goal, H. Gerrish Smith, president of the National Council of Shipbuilders, said today.

(Axis submarines have sunk 575 Allied and neutral cargo ships in the Western Atlantic since Pearl Harbor in the Associated Press tabulation of announced sinkings.)

In a year-end statement, Smith asserted that "if we are given the men, materials and equipment we can and will meet the President's call for 15 million deadweight tons of merchant ships in 1943."

Smith, saying his statement was approved by the Navy and Maritime Commission, asserted that shipbuilders, rising to meet the challenge of mass-production, delivered more than 7 times the output of 1941 when 2,088,497 tons were completed, and smashed all standards for monthly production.

The industry built 125 merchantmen, aggregating 1,110,000 tons, in December. The previous record, set in September, was 93 vessels with a deadweight tonnage of 1,009,800. The yards turned out 84 cargo carriers of 891,700 tons in November.

Smith said that 600 of the 750 ships were of the Liberty type, the emergency freighters of approximately 10,500 deadweight tons, which are mostly all-welded and constructed in yards designed for that purpose.

The flow of materials and equipment, he said, had been "unusually dependable" during the past year, but he added that "shipyards facilities and a growing efficiency, however, have so expanded that we can now produce ships faster than certain controlling types of material can be supplied for commercial and naval vessels."

"Naval vessels built in privately owned yards have been delivered in six months to a year ahead of schedule," Smith said and declared that "repair work on our own commercial and naval vessels as well as those of the United Nations have taxed our capacity, but we have met the challenge. Two companies alone repaired over 12,000 of all types in a recent year.

"Our river and Great Lakes yards are turning out the largest ships they have ever built, the size being limited only by ability to float the craft from inland waters to the sea," he said. "Ore ships, rivaling the length of our greatest battleships, are now being constructed in Great Lakes shipyards for use in lake service. Wood and concrete ships and barges also are being made in considerable number."

Navy Joins Army In Issuance of Full Casualty Lists

The Army and Navy said yesterday that future casualty lists may be published and broadcast in full—reversing a policy effective since a few days after Pearl Harbor.

The first list to receive such treatment was given out for use in morning newspapers of Thursday, or for broadcast after 8 p. m. in all time zones, Wednesday.

Heretofore, both newspaper and radio stations could use only the names of those casualties whose next of kin resided in the immediate area.

This policy had the purpose of preventing the enemy from deducting what Naval or Army units might be operating in specific areas from the names contained in full nationally published casualty lists.

The new arrangement was worked out by the Office of War Information, in the interest of a more complete war news coverage.

The old restrictions were specifically imposed by the Army and Navy, and had no relationship to the voluntary code promulgated by the Office of Censorship.

Fighting French Governor on Way to Jibuti

By Alfred E. Wall
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Dec. 29 (AP).—French Somaliland was formally made a Fighting French ally today by Gen. Charles de Gaulle's National Committee and it announced tonight that Andre Bayardelle already had been sent to Jibuti as governor to administer the resources of the East African colony in behalf of the United Nations.

It was the last French African possession to be severed from Vichy—except for contested Tunisia, where the issue remains in doubt.

De Gaulle's committee, warming up more and more toward a union of arms and resources with the new French African administration of Gen. Henri Honore Giraud, said the acquisition of Somaliland brings over also about a division of troops garrisoned there.

General de Gaulle, the committee said, "is acceding to their urgent request to be transferred to an active theater of operations as soon as possible."

Gen. Paul le Gentilhomme, Fighting French national commissioner for war and high commissioner for Madagascar and the Indian Ocean, arrived at Jibuti to confer with Brig. Gen. duPont, who signed the agreement whereby French Somaliland turns from Vichy to the United Nations.

French Somaliland's importance lies in its strategic position on the narrows of the southern entry into the Red Sea and it always was a barrier to Mussolini's now collapsed conquest of Ethiopia.

Jibuti is the railhead for all Ethiopia.

Since the Italian threat in East Africa has been nullified, Jibuti remained a menace mainly as a possible Axis observation post on the United Nations sealanes from the Indian Ocean through to the Red Sea and Suez to the Middle East.

Another sign of greater French unity was seen in a letter to de Gaulle from Vice Admiral Emile Muselier, former commander of the Fighting French naval forces, declaring he was ready "to accept any active post at sea or on land in the fight aginst the enemies of France."

Early last spring Muselier resigned his naval command and his post on the Free French National Committee, and later declined to become inspector general of the fleet.

Churchill Hopes For Real Support In Peace Labors

Prime Minister Churchill, in a message to President Roosevelt, expressed hope yesterday that the bonds of comradeship forged in this war will be a "lasting support in the labors of peace."

The British Prime Minister was replying to greetings the President recently extended on behalf of Congress and the American people to the armed forces of Great Britain.

The text of his message:

"I have received the stirring message sent by you, Mr. President, at this season from Congress and on behalf of the people of the United States, and have arranged for its transmission to the armed forces of Great Britain on land and sea and in the air in all parts of the empire or in enemy territory.

"I know it would be their wish that I should cordially reciprocate these greetings. During the past year we have welcomed the ever-growing forces from America to our ports and camps and our airfields. In all theaters of operation men of America and men of Britain have fought side by side under each others' command, as circumstances required.

"Bonds of respect, comprehension and comradeship have been forged which will, I pray, far outlive this war and be a lasting support in the labors of peace when, after we have won victory, we strive to build together a better and a happier world."

Nazi Airmen Gun Britons In the Streets

By the Associated Press

London, Dec. 29.—While R. A. F. fighter squadrons swept across the French coast in snow and wintry winds, two German pilots machined-gunned people in the streets and bombed homes along the southeast English coast today.

An air ministry communique said "Mosquito planes of the bomber command attacked railway targets in France. Two of our fighters are missing." Dispatches from Folkstone said the R. A. F. planes had headed toward Calais.

Two German fighter pilots, flying along the roof-tops, caused some casualities as they strafed people with machine-gun fire and dropped bombs in residential areas in one town. Several houses were demolished by one bomb which bounced over two streets.

The British Ministry of Information reported, meanwhile, that German Stuka planes were using new type bombs described as "silver balls that crackle and seem to explode in the air." The British said the bombs were dropped in Libya.

Sub Takes Ship's Captain Prisoner After Sinking

A Gulf Coast Port, Dec. 29 (AP).—The Navy today announced the torpedoing and sinking in the Atlantic of a medium-sized British merchant ship late in November off the northern coast of South America by an Axis submarine whose crew made the ship master a prisoner of war.

The Navy said, however, the master was able to dispose of all material which might have been of use to the enemy.

The crew then left the spot in four lifeboats, landed on the coast of South America and were brought to a United States Gulf Coast port.

65 Million Seen Working By End of 1943

As many as 65 million men and women may be needed in the armed forces and in industries and occupations essential to the war effort by the end of 1943, Paul V. McNutt, War Manpower Commissioner, said yesterday at a press conference.

Of the total, at least 20 million may be required in war industries alone, he said, cautioning at the same time that "these estimates may be too low." The total labor force at present, McNutt said, is estimated at 57 million, of whom 17½ million are in war industries.

The eight million additional men and women needed to meet the December, 1943, estimate will come from many sources, with at least 2,800,000 expected to be transferred from present employment to war work.

Sources of Increase

Of the balance, he said, 700,000 will come from the presently unemployed; four million will be women not now employed; one million will come from three general sources. These are improved efficiency of industry, expansion of working hours and greater use of younger and older persons.

Expansion of the work week to an average of 48 hours, McNutt said, will represent the equivalent of about 600,000 new workers. Further increase of the work week, he added, "might further reduce the need for additional workers, but this is debatable. Too long a work week could have the effect of reducing the efficiency of the workers."

In spite of the need already foreseen for greatly expanding the Nation's labor force, McNutt said he did not consider compulsory job control legislation necessary at the present time. He said neither war industry nor farm production had been cut by lack of manpower in 1942, when the number of persons in war industry had grown from 6,900,000 to 17,500,000.

Farm Aid Planned

He hoped to assure agriculture, he said, that there would be sufficient labor to plant and harvest the crop scheduled under the 1943 farm program. "I will go as far as necessary to accomplish this," he declared, "I think, however, it will require utilization of a good many people who have not been in agricultural work before."

McNutt intimated that indirect sanctions might be applied to holders of Government contracts if they refuse to cooperate in the program of transferring employes to jobs considered more important by the War Manpower Commission. No such sanctions had been applied so far, he said, and added that he was pleased with success attained through voluntary agreements in war industry areas.

Sanctions May Be Used

However, he said, "there is a realization on the part of everyone now that in order to meet this load which we are going to have in 1943 we will have to utilize everything we have where it will do the most good." Sanctions might include such means of bringing pressure upon recalcitrant employers as withholding priorities for materials necessary to continue operations.

McNutt indicated also that operation of the draft to provide men for the Navy, Coast Guard and Marines might be delayed about 60 days instead of being started February 1 as previously scheduled. He said he would make "pretty strong" representations to have all branches of the service adopt uniform physical and educational standards for acceptance of inductees to simplify the process of induction and assignment. At present Navy standards are somewhat higher than those of the Army.

Relatives of Benes Interned by Nazis

Bern, Dec. 29 (AP).—The Neue Zuercher Zeitung said today that relatives of Dr. Eduard Benes, former President of Czechoslovakia, had been interned by the Nazis, with the intimation that further measures might be taken against them in reprisal for his acts as President of the Czech Government in London.

Similar measures were taken against the relatives of Frantisek Nemes, former Minister of Commerce and now Welfare Minister in the Czech Government in Exile, the newspaper said.

Gas Poisoning Kills Prince Albrecht, Wife

Berlin (From German Broadcasts), Dec. 29 (AP).—Prince Albrecht of Schaumburg-Lippe of Austria and his commoner wife of a few years died of coal gas poisoning on Christmas Eve at Linz, the German Transocean News Agency reported in a dispatch from the Austrian city today.

The prince, who was 73, and his wife were found dead in their bedroom Christmas morning, Transocean said, and an investigation showed they had died from carbon monoxide gas escaping from a faulty stove.

Naval Officer Decorated for Attempting To Save Two Dying Enlisted Men From Sea

Destroyer Skipper Tried Valiantly To Save 2 Carriers

Comdr. True Given Both Navy Cross And the D. S. M.

Comdr. Arnold Ellsworth True, 41, of Corinth, Ky., has been awarded both the Navy Cross and the Distinguished Service Medal for great heroism displayed as skipper of the destroyer Hammann in aiding rescues and damage control work when the aircraft carriers Lexington and Yorktown were lost in the Pacific.

The Lexington went down in the battle of the Coral Sea last May and the Yorktown later was sunk during the battle of Midway.

The destroyer Hammann also was lost at Midway, while standing by the stricken Yorktown, and Commander True himself was rescued from the water.

His citation for the Midway action said that when he was rescued about two hours after the Hammann was sunk by torpedoes from a Japanese submarine he "was found to be supporting two enlisted men, one on each arm. He himself was so stunned and exhausted that he did not realize that the two men he had rescued had died."

Commander True, whose wife, Mrs. Corine True, lives at San Carlos, Calif., received the Navy Cross for his heroism in connection with the sinking of the Lexington when his job was to rescue survivors from the vessel before it finally went down.

"While still in danger of another attack by enemy planes and while the Lexington was being shaken by violent explosions and was being gutted by raging fires," the citation said, "Commander True in total disregard for his own safety placed his ship alongside the Lexington and took off a large number of survivors. His courage and devotion to duty were in keeping with the highest traditions of the naval service."

The citation accompanying the Distinguished Service Medal awarded for Commander True's part in efforts to save the Yorktown, reported that he placed the Hammann alongside the carrier in order to furnish water for fighting fire and for flooding empty tanks and to supply electrical power for operating salvage pumps.

Associated Press from U. S. Army

This is the new United States air medal to be awarded for meritorious achievement while participating in aerial flight. It was designed by Pvt. Walker Hancock, who received a prize of $1500 from the War Department

"Knowing that the Yorktown would be the target of enemy submarine and air attacks which might be made against our forces in that vicinity, that several enemy submarines had been reported nearby, and that he would probably be unable to get his ship out of the way of any submarine or air attack directed at the Yorktown until the attack should hit," the citation said "he maintained his ship in that position for an extended period; by means of the water pressure and power furnished, a fire which had been burning since the Yorktown was hit by bombs on June 4, was extinguished, and sufficient water had been transferred within the ship to remove two degrees of her dangerous list.

"In midafternoon an enemy submarine made a successful torpedo attack against the Yorktown. The first torpedo hit and sank the U. S. S. Hammann. Two other torpedoes exploded against the side of the Yorktown sufficiently close to the Hammann to have sunk her if she had not already been hit.

"Nine of the 12 officers in the Hammann were killed as was a large percentage of her crew.

"Commander True, when rescued some two hours later, was found to be supporting two enlisted men, one on each arm. He himself was so stunned and exhausted that he did not realize that the two men he had rescued had died."

The medals were presented to Commander True by Admiral William F. Halsey, commander of the South Pacific area and the South Pacific force.

Andrews Awarded D. F. C.

Lieut. Gen. Frank M. Andrews, commander of United States forces in the Middle East, has been awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross, the War Department announced yesterday.

The decoration went to General Andrews for his participation in flights through the area of his command when he was commanding general of the Caribbean Defense Command prior to his transfer to the Middle East in November. Andrews supervised the establishment of air bases and other defense installations in the Caribbean area.

His citation said that in frequent day and night flights in all kinds of weather he demonstrated to his men the practicability of an effective air control over the extensive region.

Andrews also recently received the Distinguished Service Medal.

Nelson Finds WPB Conflict Inevitable

Pointing out that conflicts between Government agencies are inevitable in the war program, Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the War Production Board, yesterday revealed two such major interagency disagreements and stated that it was his job to resolve the differences.

The disputes are the following:

A row between Rubber Administrator William M. Jeffers and Petroleum Administrator Harold L. Ickes over whether the rubber program or the 100-octane aviation gasoline program should get certain critical materials needed for both programs.

Navy-Shipping Dispute

A dispute between the Maritime Commission and the Navy over whether merchant shipping or naval escort vessels should get first crack at materials.

Nelson cited the two disputes merely for illustrative purposes to show how his job operates. His comments were made at an off-the-record press conference last week and released for publication yesterday.

Nelson said that his job is to reconcile conflicting points of view to see that all important programs move forward together.

This can never be done without rubs, he said. He told the correspondents to note that when things are harmonious it is an indication that officials are not doing enough

Same Objectives

Nelson was trying to explain to the newsmen that the oft-reported conflict between the military and the War Production Board was merely another aspect of the same process and that actually there is no difference between the objectives of WPB and the services.

The production chief expressed the belief that there is no real opposition in the services to the coordinating actions of Nelson and Charles E. Wilson, his production vice chairman.

There will constantly be differences of opinion, whenever anything as big as the production program is involved, he said. Whenever you get strong men together, he added, there are going to be differences of opinion as to methods, and the job is to sit down and get each one to understand what the main objective is.

WPB Removes Tensions

Nelson said that there has been no basic or fundamental conflicts between WPB and the services on what is wanted, when, and where. These questions are strictly the job of the fighting forces, he said.

WPB's job is to tell the services whether their programs are possible in combination with the requirements of the civilian economy and the war program as a whole.

As for the rubber-gasoline conflict and the merchant ship-escort vessel conflict, Nelson stated that his job is to get all programs moving ahead together. He expressed the opinion that the job could be done.

Yugoslavian Cabinet Resigns In Favor of New Government

By Howard Berry
International News Service Staff Writer

London, Dec. 29.—Yugoslavia's Premier Prof. Slobodan Yovanovic, and his government-in-exile resigned tonight but they immediately started work on the formation of a new government under Premier Yovanovic.

A government communique, announcing the cabinet's resignation, denied newspaper reports that Dr. Montchilo Ninchic would be replaced as foreign minister in the new cabinet.

It was revealed that the new governing body would be smaller than the former cabinet of 16 members. Diplomatic observers here have predicted that the cabinet will contain four ministers to Washington, appointed to watch Yugoslav interests in the United States.

The communique said that Prime Minister Yovanovic "following the unanimous agreement of the cabinet, has handed the resignation of his government to King Peter."

"His Majesty," the official report said, "consulted with leaders of all political parties. All agreed that a new government should be formed by the hitherto Prime Minister Yovanovic.

"For reasons of efficiency under the conditions of war," said the communique, "The Yugoslav government has decided to reduce the size of the cabinet while maintaining its character of an all-party government."

An official spokesman previously had indicated that Gen. Draja Mikhailovic, leader of the army fighting the Axis in Yugoslavia, would continue as minister of war.

Jobs Assured U. S. Workers Going to War

Jobs of Federal employes who enter military service after being transferred to war work will be protected after the war, under a directive issued yesterday by Manpower Commissioner McNutt.

Yesterday's directive amended that of last September which dealt with release and transfer of Government employes. The original directive, McNutt explained, did not provide for reemployment in Federal service of persons inducted into the Army or Navy after being transferred from their Government jobs to others considered necessary in prosecution of the war.

The amendment is retroactive to September 27 and contains a provision to protect reemployment rights which have lapsed because a former Government employe failed to file application for employment in time.

Body of Girl, 19, Found Badly Beaten

New York, Dec. 29 (INS).—Automobile tire tracks tonight were the sole clue police possessed in their search for the slayer of 19-year-old Mary Rycoitch of Mariner's Harbor, Staten Island, whose stabbed body was found in a lonely section of Staten Island.

The girl, who had been dead more than 30 hours when found, was badly battered. Her skull was fractured and she was stabbed through the neck, an autopsy revealed.

Ramspeck to Ask $35,000 More to Continue Probe

Representative Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, yesterday announced his intention of asking $35,000 from the new Congress to continue and expand his probe into Federal personnel practices.

His House Civil Service Committee was given $3000 during the last session with which to lay the groundwork for an investigation of such complaints as top-heavy staffs, inefficient supervision, and wasteful placement of employes within the United States service.

Ramspeck said that he had selected a special investigator and staff for the probe, but will not name them until next week.

A preliminary report on the findings to date is expected within a week or so as well.

Jap Raider Sunk By Indian Ship

New Delhi, Dec. 31 (INS).—"We are all proud of you," was the message sent H. M. I. S. Bengal on arrival into port by the first officer commanding the Royal Indian Navy, Vice Admiral Sir Herbert Fitzherbert.

When she was sighted from port crowds flocked to the waterfront and during the day she had a constant stream of visitors anxious to see the ship and the men who had dared so much and so successfully. First aboard was the senior naval officer of the port and afterward came other naval officers and wives and relatives of the members of the ship's company.

H. M. I. S. Bengal arrived from a shipbuilder's yard overseas and on her first entry into Indian waters she bore scars of which any ship's company might be proud. Forward and aft were signs of damage she had sustained in battle—damage which was more than returned, for one of the raiders she fought sank in flames.

During an interview, Lieut. Comdr. W. J. Wilson, R. I. N. R. commander of H. M. I. S. Bengal, described how at 11:45 a. m. on November 11, about 1000 miles southwest of Java, unknown vessels were sighted on the port bow 8 miles away. It was the larger of two raiders to engage her. H. M. I. S. Bengal's course was altered in the raider's direction and her speed increased to full. The raider came up fast and the Bengal steamed straight ahead at her. The raider also increased speed and opened fire at about 3500 yards with her forward guns.

"We retaliated and hit first," said Lieutenant Commander Wilson. "At 3000 yards we must have hit the 10,000-ton raider in the magazine because a great sheet of flame shot up astern almost mast high. We then closed range and fought the action at about 2500 yards."

Juin Appointed To Giraud Post

London, Dec. 29 (AP).—Reuters said the French army headquarters in North Africa announced today that Gen. Alphonse Juin, former military aide to Gen. Auguste Nogues, Governor General of Morocco, had been appointed commander in chief of French forces in North Africa.

Juin thus would succeed Gen. Henri Giraud who has replaced Admiral Darlan as high commissioner in North Africa. He was Vichy's commander in chief in North Africa when the armistice was signed at Algiers after the Allied landing last month.

Msgr. Ryan Warns Against Reaction

Doubts Free Enterprise Will Be Able to Meet Returning Veterans' Demands for Jobs 'Now'

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Dec. 29.—Returning soldiers and sailors will not be "fooled by the old claptrap concerning 'rugged individualism,'" but "will demand jobs here and now," the Right Rev. John A. Ryan declared today in an attack on "the authentic Bourbons of our time."

Msgr. Ryan, director of the National Catholic Welfare Conference's department of social action, told the American Catholic Sociological Society he could speak confidently "about two future contingencies:"

"First, the millions of returning soldiers and sailors will not be satisfied or fooled by the old claptrap concerning 'rugged individualism,' 'American opportunity' or 'American equality.' With their knowledge of the almost unlimited productive capacity of our industries, as shown during the war, they will demand the opportunity to earn by honest labor a decent amount of that enormous potential product. And they will demand that their share of the potential product be made actual.

Warning to Middle Classes

"They will not be lulled to sleep by commonplaces about the limitations and difficulties of distribution nor by promises of 'prosperity just around the corner.' They will demand jobs here and now. I do not believe that an economy dominated by the philosophy of 'free enterprise' will be able to meet that demand.

"The second positive statement that I can make with some confidence is this: Unless the middle classes, that is, the comfortable farmers, the members of the professions, the small businessmen, the holders of executive and directive positions in the great corporations and, indeed, the majority of the 'white collar' classes—cease to get their opinions from the daily papers and strive to acquire a greater amount of realistic economic intelligence. They (the middle classes) may exercise sufficient voting power to place the champions of 'free enterprise' in control of economic reconstruction after the war. From such a calamity may the good Lord deliver us!"

Warning in his prepared address that labor "may lose all the advantages that it has obtained since June, 1933, if it can be brought about by the dominant economic groups and their associates and satellites," Monsignor Ryan, a resident of Washington, D. C., continued:

"That such is their deliberate desire and design is clearly indicated by certain significant events: The declarations of the National Association of Manufacturers; the attitudes and utterances of the majority of the metropolitan newspapers; the pronouncements and performances of the most powerful of the farm organizations, and the reactionary attitude of the majority of the recently elected Congress. These persons and institutions are the authentic Bourbons of our time. They have learned nothing and forgotten nothing.

Puts Faith in Roosevelt

"If the Republicans elect their candidate for the Presidency in 1944 and if they are able, with the assistance of Democratic reactionaries, to control both houses of Congress, the status and influence of organized labor, and therefore the whole body of wage earners, will undergo a disastrous decline.

"As a matter of fact, this combination of Republicans and reactionary Democrats already dominates the House of Representatives; that is, the body that was elected the third of last month. Except for two obstacles the most important recent gains of labor would all be swept away within the next six months. These obstacles are the Senate and the President, and we cannot be too confident about the Senate.

"So long, however, as the present occupant of the White House remains there, no fears need be entertained for the cause of labor or the cause of social justice."

The society elected Dr. Eva J. Ross of Trinity College, Washington, D. C., as its new president. Other officers elected at the organization's convention here were Sister M. Liguori, Mundelein College Chicago, treasurer, and Ralph A. Gallagher, Loyola University, Chicago, secretary.

Ex-German, U.S. Flier, Waits Bombing Order

"I want to drop some bombs, and I guess you know where," said Air Force Sergt. Fred Brower, 29, yesterday after he was granted American citizenship by Justice David A. Pine in a special session of Naturalization Court.

Sergeant Brower was a German until the Nazis drove his family from the country. Stripped of citizenship and possessions, he fled with his parents and brother to Egypt, then to India, where the rest of the family remained.

But Brower, a 6-foot-2 giant with gray eyes, black hair and 205 pounds of bulging muscle, pushed on to Japan, where he got a ship for San Francisco. He landed there February 20, 1941, with $2.65 and an English vocabulary of a dozen words.

"But I felt rich," he said yesterday. He got a job, learned English in night school and joined the Army February 23 this year.

Justice Pine admitted Sergeant Brower to citizenship after officials assured him that the case was thoroughly investigated by intelligence agents, who found that Browers' technical status of "enemy alien" ought not to be a barrier.

By court order, the sergeant's name was changed yesterday from Fritz Brauer.

Goodland, 80, Will Succeed To Wisconsin Governorship

By the Associated Press

Madison, Wis., Dec. 29.—Octogenarian Walter S. Goodland, whom Republican leaders did not want to be lieutenant governor of Wisconsin, fell heir today to the duties of Governor.

Under a ruling of the State Supreme Court, Goodland will fill the vacancy caused by the death of Governor-elect Orland S. Loomis three weeks ago.

The death of a Governor-elect was without precedent in Wisconsin. The statutes did not cover the contingency specifically. In the resulting confusion the court was asked for a determination of Loomis' successor.

The justices held that when Gov. Julius P. Heil's term expired January 4, 1943, a vacancy would exist and that the powers and duties of the offices would devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor Goodland, who was elected to a third term last November 3.

The court ruled that Heil could not continue in office, that no special election could be held, and that Heil could not fill the vacancy by appointment.

The tribunal did not say that Goodland would be Governor, leaving the assumption that he would be acting Governor. Thus Goodland would receive the Lieutenant Governor's salary of $1500 a year, plus $6 a day for performing the duties of Governor while the legislature is in session and $5 a day after the legislature adjourns. The Governor's salary is $6000.

Goodland, 80, last Tuesday, promised "the best administration I can possibly give" and prepared to leave for Madison to prepare the budget for the next biennium.

A native of Wisconsin, Goodland formerly practiced law and published a daily newspaper at Racine, and served the city as mayor and State Senator. He was elected Lieutenant Governor in 1938, re-elected in 1940.

The Republican convention which indorsed Heil for a third term, attempted to discard Goodland. A fighter, Goodland refused to bow out and later won renomination. He was reelected by a wide margin when Loomis, a Progressive, defeated Heil by 105,000 votes.

Nazi Siegfried Line On Atlantic Nears Finish

London, Dec. 29 (AP).—The Calais radio said tonight that Adolf Hitler has nearly finished construction of a "new Siegfried Line" along the Atlantic seaboard of France.

"The new Atlantic wall nearing completion is several hundred miles long and impregnable to modern weapons," the station broadcast. "Built by the Todt (Nazi public works) organization, it consists of an ingenious system of strong points, concrete dugouts and gun emplacements of all calibers."

WLB Asks Disputants to Lunch, Finds Strike in Own Cafeteria

Attempting to settle a wage argument, members of the War Labor Board took disputants to lunch in the Labor Department cafeteria yesterday, only to have 80 employes fold their arms and refuse to serve them.

Embarrassed War Labor Board members had to ask their guests, all concerned in Chicago's lake carrier wage argument, to wait for soup while they settled a strike in their own building.

The workers, all members of the United Cafeteria Employes' Union No. 471, were protesting because the War Labor Board had not yet passed on a 9 per cent increase granted them November 1 by the District Welfare and Recreational Association, which operates the cafeteria. Capt. F. W. Hoover, association manager, said the increase could not be paid without WLB approval.

Labor Department Conciliator Frank J. Sheehan called employes together, promising WLB would give their case speedy consideration. His efforts were seconded by those of Jack Mink, local union agent, and the employes went back to work in half an hour.

Public Cautioned On Substandard Electric Heaters

New York, Dec. 28 (AP).—Black market sales of electrical heaters, manufacture of which was banned last June by the WPB, were reported today by regional offices of the WPB and OPA.

The Government agencies charged that individuals have been buying parts of the spot heaters and assembling them in slipshod fashion, without regard for underwriters' regulations or workability.

New Municipal Court Clears Big Accumulation of Cases

Five months of intensvie work by the new Municipal Court have wiped out the staggering backlog of pending criminal cases which accumulated before the court was set up last July.

Attorney General Biddle yesterday made public a special report of Chief Judge George P. Barse which showed that the 889 criminal cases awaiting jury trial last July 9 had dwindled to only 196 on December 12.

This was accomplished despite 1038 more jury trials having been asked during the five-month period. The court disposed of such cases at the rate of 346 a month.

"The job required frequent and flexible adjustments in the assignments of the judges and the other officers," the chief judge reported, adding:

"The foregoing results could not have been accomplished without the whole-hearted cooperation and the persistent efforts of all the judges of the court and of the prosecutors—the United States attorney and the corporation counsel, and their assistants and the clerk of the court and his assistants.

"Although I have heretofore indicated it individually and informally, I now desire to record officially my sincere appreciation of this splendid cooperation."

Jap Fountain In Honolulu Is Torn Down

Honolulu (INS).—A Honolulu landmark of 25 years standing—a Japanese phoenix fountain in Kapiolani Park which was presented to the city to commemorate the coronation of Emperor Yoshihito—was torn down recently and carted off to the scrap heap.

Destruction of the fountain, which has served as a gathering place for Japanese celebrations and anniversary observances for many years, came after demands for its demolition were made by citizens.

One citizen suggested that Honoluluans follow the example set by patriots in New York at the time of the Revolutionary War, who attached a stout rope to a lead equestrian statue of King George III in Bowling Green, pulled it down and melted it into bullets for the Continental Army.

It was suggested that places on the pulling rope to be attached to the imperial phoenix fountain be sold to Americans—of Japanese extraction or otherwise—with a grievance against the statue or the Japanese Empire.

This suggestion was thrown out, however, when the parks board authorized the use of city-county workmen for the job.

Juvenile Crime Dip Cheers Officials

By Margaret A. Lang
Post Staff Writer

Juvenile delinquency authorities are encouraged by the decrease during the past six months in court and police statistics concerning child cases, but point out that the overall situation has been growing worse for a number of years.

In the District, the Juvenile Court reports a drop during the past six months, but officials emphasize the rise as seen in the 1940, 1941 and 1942 fiscal year reports. In 1940, there were 2351 cases as compared to 3205 for 1941 and 3487 for 1942.

Police statistics show a similar rise. Juvenile arrests jumped from 5219 in the fiscal year ended June, 1940, to 7135 for 1941. In 1942, the rise continued, bringing the number of arrests to 7395.

The rise of juvenile delinquency in American homes comes as no surprise. All concerned with this problem have studied the situation in England where an increase of more than 40 per cent was reported in the first year of the war.

5 to 60 Per Cent Increase

In a survey conducted by the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, 11 out of 30 courts, in defense areas, showed that juvenile delinquency for girls has risen anywhere from 5 to 60 per cent in 1941 over 1940 and delinquency among boys had gone up anywhere from 8 to 52 per cent. Out of 30 strategic cities, 32 showed a marked increase in delinquency.

Elsa Castendyck, director of Child Guidance Division, United States Children's Bureau, said that in America we need not anticipate anything comparable to the British increase.

She pointed out that we have had none of the dislocations caused by the blitz; the nightly trips to the shelters or the closing of schools because of raids. Neither have we had the evacuations with their resulting increase in the juvenile population in areas unable to provide adequate school or recreational facilities.

But the causes of delinquency are not all the result of air raids or other equally apparent factors.

Economic Upheaval Factor

Dr. James Allen Nolan, managing director of the Washington Criminal Justice Association, in outlining some of the causes of juvenile delinquency, said that social and economic upheaval played an important role.

Families are dislocated, parents are preoccupied with war services and there is a general breakdown of home life.

The increase of working mothers was attributed by several authorities as an important factor resulting in less supervision for school-age children and no additional recreational facilities.

School life seems dull to many children today, authorities stated, pointing out that life at home, although not including the child, is filled with war talk and what seems to the child like important activity.

Other children become emotionally upset because of blackouts and test raids conducted in the community.

An important factor stressed by all the officials is high wages being earned by older boys hitherto unaccustomed to easy money.

Spending New to Many

Miss Castendyck emphasized this saying: "These boys, receiving high wages, have no way of knowing how to spend their money. This often gets them into difficulties. They are replacing adults who have gone to better paying jobs or into the service and the younger boys are leaving school or going after school to work in honky tonks, pool halls, bowling alleys and cheap restaurants. These jobs have a good many potentialities of getting the youngsters into trouble.

In overcrowded defense areas the housing problem is a cause of trouble. But the lack of probation officers, teachers and people in the recreation field is of prime importance, she said.

Girls find the loss of male companionship an upsetting thing and much of the association with soldiers and sexual promiscuity is attributed to their loss of old associations, resulting in a fear that they will not get married.

Easy to Raise Funds

Merrill Conover, group work consultant, recreation agencies of the Children's Bureau, said that lack of staff in the agencies was an important problem and that funds for expansion were not available to many of the agencies.

"The money goes to war activities now," he said, "It's easier to raise funds for the man in uniform."

Miss Martha MacDonald, psychiatric services advisor of the Children's Bureau, said that the affect of the war could be seen in little children's play while it can be found in more violent forms in the older child.

She said that the children's world, which stood for gentleness and not violence, now suddenly justifies killing.

"They see and hear of killing and the force of hate is all around them. With the older child who has not had the best teaching, in respect to his behavior toward his fellowmen, this situation is the spark to set off his smouldering resentment, a resentment that has never been resolved."

Three Fears Outlined

Three fears that affect the juvenile today, she said, are fear of aggression, fear of the enemy and fear of bombings. She said that the child who can be found impersonating the enemy in his games is merely trying to overcome his fear by being the powerful person himself. The same situation, she said, is often found in children whose fathers bully them at home. This child becomes a bully in school and at play, in an attempt to prove himself a strong person.

"With the proper foundation existing in the parent-child relationship, new war activities will not topple it over. But it is where the relationship was not right, to start with, that the new situation comes an exaggeration of the behaivor that could have been found even in peace times."

Tomorrow's article will present what is or is not being done to meet the rise in juvenile delinquency.

Canadian Train Crash Injures 20

Lazare, Manitoba, Dec. 29 (AP).—Twenty persons were injured, one believed seriously, when the Canadian National Railway's eastbound Continental Limited collided head-on with a troop train here today.

All those injured suffered cuts from flying glass and a shaking-up except one man who was reported to have received a serious injury when a fork plunged through the roof of his mouth while he was in the diner.

Wallace Aims Acceptable, Says Italian Journal

Bern, Dec. 29 (AP).—Vice President Wallace's peace aims along economic lines would be acceptable to Italy provided there were adjustments to give poorer nations economic opportunity, the Italian newspaper Giornale d'Italia implied today.

Giornale d'Italia, whose viewpoint presumably is that of Virginio Gayda, devoted most of its attention to economic excerpts, and listed revision of colonial possessions as one of the major peace problems. Gayda frequently reflects official opinion.

Giornale d'Italia quoted lengthy excerpts of Wallace's speech, especially passages concerning abundance as against misery, "a war point whereof all peoples could agree. It is the problem of the means to work, the possibility for production of commerce in accord with the needs of the various states."

21,000 Births This Year Set Record for D. C.

Despite the Government's frantic pleas that nobody move to overcrowded Washington, the stork has been working overtime to populate the city, the Health Department revealed yesterday in announcing an all-time record birth rate for the Capital in 1942.

During the past 12 months, 21,000 infants have arrived in Washington maternity wards. Computing from a basis of 848,000 population, the birth rate is 25 per 1000 for 1942, as compared with 24.4 per 1000 for 1941. More infants have survived, too. The mortality rate for 1942 is only 45.1 per 1000, while in 1941 it was 51.2. The maternity mortality rate also dropped from 2.7 per 1000 to 2.3.

Further to boost the Health Department's claim of the "healthiest year of all time in the District," statistics show that in spite of the usual dangerous health conditions attendant upon a boom town, the death rate for the District was at an all-time low of 10.7 per 1000 population.

Tuberculosis, which used to take a toll of 100 deaths or more per 100,000 population, according to the Health Department, was responsible for only 73.8 deaths per 100,000 in 1942. Pneumonia mortality dropped from 64.8 per 100,000 to 57.9.

Highest mortality figures released by the Health Department were for heart disease, which were 270.2 per 100,000, and for cancer, which were 131.1.

No deaths were reported from measles, infantile paralysis or smallpox, and only two from diphtheria and typhoid fever. Influenza became a minor factor with only 2.5 deaths per 100,000 reported.

An upward trend, however, was shown in deaths from whooping cough, which were 2.5 per 100,000 as compared with 1.5 last year, and from meningitis, of which the rate was 1.7 as against 0.3 in 1941.

Although health department statistics revealed that most ills developing from the common colds have fallen to all-time lows, precaution was urged by Dr. George C. Ruhland, District Health Officer, to keep these diseases at their new level.

In view of the inclement weather this month, Dr. Ruhland issued a list of rules as the most satisfactory way of coping with the common cold which annually claims more man hours than any other type of ailment.

"Especially important," Dr. Ruhland pointed out, "is the rule concerning self-treatment. Call a physician, especially if there is the least sign of fever, and follow his orders."

The Gallup Poll

Coast Voters Divided on Jap Problem

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Dec. 29.—One of the burning public questions along the Pacific Coast at present is whether the Japanese who were evacuated from the coast area should be permitted to return there after the war is over.

It is the kind of question on which the state of public opinion has a most important bearing, because the solution to the problem will depend in large measure on the relative amount of hostility or friendliness which the people of California, Oregon and Washington show toward the Japanese.

In order to determine just what the attitude is today, the Institute conducted a special intensive survey of public sentiment in the five Western States most concerned with the problem of Japanese residents—California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada and Arizona.

The question put to voters was as follows:

"Do you think the Japanese who were moved from the Pacific Coast should be allowed to return to the Pacific Coast when the war is over?"

Results of the five States are:

Would allow all to return	29%
Would allow only Japanese who are citizens to return	24
Would allow none to return	31
Undecided, at present	16

Results show that the country as a whole is more tolerant than the western area alone.

The national vote is:

National Vote
Would allow all to return	35%
Would allow only Japanese citizens to return	26
Would allow none to return	17
Undecided	22

Return to Japan?

The 1940 population census showed that the Japanese population in California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada and Arizona consisted of 93,721 who were American citizens, and 55,734 who were aliens. In other words, the citizens outnumbered the aliens by a little less than two to one.

Voters in the five-State western area who are opposed to allowing the Japanese to return were asked:

"What should be done with them?"

The largest proportion—more than two-thirds—thought they should be sent back to Japan. The legal basis for such action is not clear; it would probably require an act of Congress.

Most of the remainder thought the Japanese should be left in the inland areas where they are now interned, or in some other inland place.

In order to determine the general social attitude of West Coast residents toward the Japanese, the Institute survey asked respondents whether they would be willing to hire Japanese servants after the war is over, and whether they would be willing to trade at Japanese-owned stores.

The questions and results follow:

"Would you be willing to hire Japanese servants to work in your home after the war is over?"

Yes	26%
No	69
Undecided	5

"Would you be willing to trade at Japanese-owned stores after the war is over?"

Yes	38%
No	58
Undecided	4

Throughout the western area there is almost unanimous public approval of the Army's action in evacuating the Japanese from the Coast and sending them to detention camps.

Byrnes Sees No Hope for More Oil or Gas for Civilians in East

Stabilization Director James F. Byrnes threw cold water on the troubled oil situation of the East Coast last night as he declared he saw no hope of increasing the supply of fuel oil and gasoline being distributed in the shortage area. His statement followed a conference with railroad executives.

But the District's critical fuel situation may be improved somewhat as the result of a conference District OPA Director Whitney Leary and his fuel oil consultant, Renah Camalier, had with Price Administrator Henderson and another with District fuel oil dealers, at least as far as more equable distribution is concerned.

Prior to Brynes' conference with the rail executives, President Roosevelt met with them and asked that they make every effort humanly possible to bring more oil to the East."

Increased shipments to the East were indicated by the railroad men, but Byrnes declared these would have no effect on the supply for civilians since they would be needed to meet the constantly increasing military and lend-lease demands.

Two important steps for increasing the shipments to the East were announced by Byrnes, who said they had been worked out by Office of Defense Transportation Director Eastman. They are:

Facilitating the unloading of tank cars at terminal points in order to speed them on return trips and rerouting of tank car trains to shorten hauls.

A new petroleum container made of synthetic rubber and canvas which will provide 200 new tank cars within a month and the use of steel drums to haul oil in box cars. For the latter, the Army and Navy have the necessary drums, he said, and he plans to confer with them on plans for military shipments, thus releasing tank cars for civilian uses.

The increased use of railroad facilities offers the only hope for meeting the shortage, the administrator said, since ocean tankers are needed to transport petroleum to the battle fronts and to England, where it is needed for purely military purposes.

Both Byrnes and the President lauded the railroads for the job they have done in increasing the delivery of oil. Prior to Pearl Harbor there were 5000 barrels of oil a week delivered in Eastern Seaboard territory. Two weeks ago it was 761,000 barrels a day.

Summing up the situation, Byrnes said:

"My own conclusion is that the statements of Secretary Ickes and Price Administrator Henderson still stand true, that nothing we have discussed offers any hope for a belief that we are going to be able to increase the supply of fuel oil and gasoline above the figures determined by those two gentlemen. The military needs make any other prediction impossible."

On the local fuel oil front, Consultant Camalier looked hopefully in two directions, possibility that Petroleum Coordinator Ickes might take cognizance of the District's plight to allow shifting of more oil here from less needy points—if any exist—along the Atlantic Seaboard and probability that the District OPA and the Coordinator's office will be able to work out a better means of distribution of oil to dealers.

He said the discussion with Henderson had centered around the supply situation, especially in the event of a cold spell and the question of manpower for dealer delivery. At the meeting with the dealers, he asserted, full cooperation was pledged by the 30 men present. The dealers will send in suggestions for improvement of the oil program by Thursday and these will be digested and presented to Henderson for some action on Friday.

"We aren't taking our time about this thing," Camalier said, "because we're working against a deadline and that deadline is the next cold spell."

Resolve to be a Really Good Cook

There's nothing quite so wasteful these days as economically prepared meals that the family just won't eat. And as victory begins at home, in fact, right in our own kitchens, why not start off 1943 by trying to be a really good cook.

Naturally, planning meals ahead is difficult with restrictions and rationing programs—but meals must be nutritionally good. As it's sometimes easier to plan well-balanced menus if you have a pattern by which to go, I think you'll find the ones given below particularly helpful.

J. N. Martie, Exemplar of Self-Aid, Dies

John Noble Martie, 57, who refused to let total blindness hamper his varied activities or curb his many interests, died of a heart attack Monday while being rushed to a hospital from his home at 3313 DuBois Place Southeast.

MR. MARTIE

Funeral services will be held at 11 a. m. tomorrow at the Lee Funeral Home, Fourth Streets and Massachusetts Avenue Northeast.

Known to many friends as "Jackie," Martie lost his sight 34 years ago in an accident. But he continued an active career as carpenter, one-man band, traveler, switchboard operator, blood donor, and staunch champion of his sightless fellows. More recently, he acquired $2000 worth of war bonds.

Year of Activity

During the past year Mr. Martie ran one of the two refreshment stands in the Social Security Building. During that year also he completed the partially built new home he had purchased, building partitions, putting in flooring, plumbing and wiring, erecting a coal bin and inclosing the back porch.

With unusual manual dexterity, he learned to operate power equipment, working with both lathe and buzz saw.

A native son of Washington, Mr. Martie lost the sight of both eyes when struck by a descending elevator while adjusting cables in an adjoining shaft. Going to New York, he spent a year learning the "New York point" system, predecessor of Braille, and to operate a typewriter.

Switchboard Operator

For the next ten years he operated the switchboard at Otis Elevator Co. in New York. For another ten years he ran a concession in the New York Municipal Building. In 1926 he met the former Miss Lillian Gloria Stroud and married her three later.

When the spirit of wanderlust became too strong to down, Martie built a cabin car on a truck and he and his wife toured the country for seven years. With Mrs. Martie driving, they covered 72,000 miles while Mr. Martie made and sold souvenirs fashioned from materials of the places they traveled through; pine cones from the West, grasses from the Middle West, and shells from Florida beaches.

At night, Mr. Martie entertained tourist campers with songs or served as a one-man band for their dances, playing drums, guitar and harmonica. In 1938 he came to Washington to "settle down" and to operate various stands in Government buildings.

The story is told that Martie was once assigned to replace a partially blind man at one stand. Martie handled himself, his stocks and his customers with such dexterity, according to Joseph Clunk, chief of service for the blind of the Office of Education, that a few old customers—a bit miffed because the former operator had extended more than liberal credit—filed a complaint.

His Disposition Wins

The first man, they said, had been replaced with a man with eyesight. "They were promptly put right," Clunk said. "And Martie soon won them, as he did everyone, with his unusually attractive disposition."

Intensely interested in the welfare of the blind, Martie "always did his best to change public opinion to one of confidence in the ability of blind persons," Clunk said. "Washington has lost a fine citizen and the blind have lost one of their finest representatives."

Surviving besides Martie's wife are a sister, Mrs. Leonard Clark, and a brother, Frank Martie, both of Washington, and five sisters and brothers in other cities.

Posthumous Awards for Laurel Man

LIEUT. O. G. KING

The Distinguished Service Cross and the Purple Heart Medal have been awarded posthumously to First Lieut. Olin Gibson King of Laurel, Md., who was killed in action on Bataan Peninsula last January.

The awards were presented to his widow, Mrs. Dora Lee King, by Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckford, commanding general of the Third Service Command, at his headquarters in Baltimore.

Lieutenant King, the son of Dr. and Mrs. Jonathan King of Salt Lake City was serving with the Ninety-first Field Artillery at the time of his death. He was widely known in Washington, where he was graduated from George Washington University Law School in 1939. A member of the Officers Reserve Corps, he served at Fort Myer, Va., and later at other posts in the country before his transfer to the Philippines more than a year ago.

Lieutenant King's widow is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Amos Walsh and is well known in Laurel. Surviving also is a 16-months old son, Wayne Olin King, whom his deceased father never saw.

The citation, signed by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, was awarded in March and cited the extraordinary heroism of the young officer. General MacArthur said, "His unwavering and courageous devotion to duty provided an unforgettable example to the personnel of his command."

Collegians Urged To Teach World Meaning of Flag

Cincinnati, Dec. 29. (AP).—The Most Rev. Samuel A. Stritch, Archbishop of Chicago, urged Catholic collegians tonight to "teach the whole world that the Stars and Stripes really mean freedom and peace and neighborliness and justice and charity."

"Our country is facing its greatest historic responsibility," Archbishop Stritch declared in a speech prepared for the Catholic Collegiate Congress. "We have gone to war and we shall fight to decisive victory. At the peace table we shall play the dominant role. The whole world looks to us for a better day."

A BOY COMES HOME

REMEMBER how he used to come home?

There'd be the slam of a car door in the dusk. "So long, Joe, see you tomorrow." Then the swift, light footfalls brushing the leaves on the walk, the thud as 160 pounds of wiry muscle hit the porch in an easy bound that ignored the existence of steps . . . the crash of the front door, rattling every picture in the house, and the newly baritone voice calling, "Hey, Mom, when do we eat?"

Remember?

Now, a Marine flyer, he comes thundering in to Guadalcanal in the last light, the wind howling through the new hole in the fuselage where a chunk of shell just missed. The bomb racks are empty and, miles away on the darkening water, a Jap officer volleys desperate orders from the bridge of a destroyer that will never see Yokohama again.

Below, as his plane circles, American guns are still pounding away, winking and flashing in the twilight. On the flying field the crawling tractors and their sweaty drivers are at their endless task, filling fresh shell holes and bomb craters, making a safe surface for him. Back and forth the tractors go, up and down, looking from this height like friendly beetles, each rolling a ball of earth ahead of it. He is conscious of relief. That strip hadn't looked too good when he took off.

He loses altitude now, the ground comes up with a rush and the wheels touch and cling. He climbs stiffly down and a voice says from the gloom, "You're late, pal. Nothing minor, I hope?" He grins. Bill must have waited around, the worry-wart. What he says is, "Okay, here. Did you wolves by some mischance leave anything to eat?"

He's back at his home port again—and safe!

To make his homecoming safe, the rugged International tractors which the Marines took to Guadalcanal have worked unceasingly throughout that wild fight. Under every adverse condition, the tractors have kept going, their performance a tribute to the determined men and women who built them.

We take it to be our job, and the only job of the many machines and weapons we make for Army, Navy, and Marines, to do our best to see that every American fighting man comes home—AND COMES VICTORIOUS.

Department's Work Fruitful, Ickes Says

Blames Old Inertia For Delay in Getting Some Minerals

Secretary of the Interior Ickes declared yesterday the department's efforts to obtain complete utilization of certain domestic minerals had been delayed by "the inertia of the old way," industrial traditions and established practices.

"Whether this postponement has been costly to the Nation in the long run remains to be seen," he said in his report for the fiscal year ended June 30.

Fruitful On Whole

The department's work, Ickes said, had been dedicated to a "vigorous war program" and as a whole had been fruitful. He cited a 43-per cent increase in generating capacity on reclamation projects, laboratory developments to make possible recovery of sufficient low-grade manganese ores for use in 87,000,000 tons of steel annually, and the discovery of one million tons of bauxite, source of aluminum.

"The soundness of the conservation policies put into effect by your Administration when it came into office is now clearly apparent," Ickes told the President. "Our activities during the last year in mobilizing for war could never have been as effective if previous policies had been less sound."

Eye-Opening Proceeding

The department's task of converting its custodianship of the Nation's natural resources from a peacetime to a wartime basis "was an eye-opening proceeding."

"For years," Ickes said, "this Nation has been deluded with the idea that it was practically self-sufficient, that its industrial processes were the world's best and that its supplies were practically inexhaustible . . .

"Then we discovered that we did not have enough of the best to meet our needs and that we must perforce proceed to the utilization of what we did have."

In that field, Ickes said, he could not "with candor" say the department had been successful.

Welcome Not Wholehearted

"Our proposals for the complete utilization of certain domestic minerals for example did not meet with wholehearted welcome . . . The inertia of the old way, the weight of industrial tradition, the following of the establishment pattern frequently induced heavy industries to postpone technical innovations. In my opinion this was a postponement of the inevitable. Whether this postponement has been costly to the Nation in the long run remains to be seen."

In reviewing the work of the department's division of territories and island possession, Ickes declared the response of territorial residents "to the trials and perils of war has been magnificent." In Alaska Indians and Eskimos reported for war duty with rifles in their hands.

The problem of supplying Puerto Rico, Ickes said, remained acute and is "the most severe single problem that we face in any of the territories."

Other department accomplishments cited by Ickes included:

Completion of 5 of 15 storage dams under construction, including Grand Coulee, Friant and Marshall Ford.

Increased production of helium for barrage balloons, blimps and other uses.

An increase of 500,000 kilowatts in power production to boost Federal power output to 1,800,000 kilowatts.

"Profitable" geological surveys to locate new deposits of magnesite, tungsten, nickel, tin, chrome, vanadium and other ores in this and other American countries.

Looking ahead, Ickes predicted that stabilization measures already in force in the soft coal industry would, if extended, prevent a repetition of what he termed the industry's demoralization following World War I. The Reclamation Bureau, he said, has a reservoir of 50 postwar public works projects to employ demobilized servicemen and jobless industrial workers.

Early Return To Civil Rule Seen in Hawaii

By the Associated Press.

Secretary of the Navy Knox reported yesterday that "a completely satisfactory formula" had been worked out for restoring a measure of civil control in the Territory of Hawaii, which was placed under military government following the Japanese attack at Pearl Harbor December 7, 1941.

He said that final arrangements for taking this step would be "announced shortly."

President Roosevelt said the question of reestablishing a portion of civilian authority is shaping up all right. He told reporters he thought there would be a certain amount of relinquishment of military control and that the matter probably would work out all right without much trouble.

The Secretary attended a conference at the War Department Monday of representatives of the War, Navy and Justice Departments.

The problem discussed, he said, involved, first, the preservation of military security around America's Gibraltar of the Pacific, and, second, the desire on the part of many people to restore as large a degree as possible of civil control.

Some activities, Knox said, naturally can be most effectively handled by the civil authorities and will be put into civil hands as quickly and fully as possible.

Lieut. Gen. Delos C. Emmons is commander of the Army's Hawaiian department and military governor of the Territory. The Navy's interest arises from the fact that Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, commander in chief of the Pacific fleet, is also supreme commander for the entire Pacific area.

Gov. Ingram M. Stainback of Hawaii conferred with President Roosevelt during the morning but declined to say whether there was any talk of lifting military rule in the Territory.

He said he hoped to leave in a matter of days to head back for Hawaii.

Owners Hit Union Hiring Of Seamen

By Charles O. Gridley
Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

Whether Great Lakes seamen selected under a union preference rule are as capable of maintaining the terrible pace of ore delivery to steel mills as those hand-picked by ships' masters became the main issue yesterday in argument before the War Labor Board on recommendations for union security and union hiring.

Representatives of the four companies involved, Inland Steel, Interstate Steamship, Bethlehem Transportation and International Harvester, argued against the findings of a WLB panel, which heard testimony from both sides, that the National Maritime union have first opportunity to supply unlicensed seamen to fill vacancies aboard the 23 ships operated by the employers.

Reporting that the fleet of bulk freighters on the lakes brought down 92 million tons of ore this year, against a prewar record of 66 million tons, Clarence B. Randall, vice president of Inland Steel, said the 100-million-ton goal for 1943 might be jeopardized if the companies were deprived of the right to select their own employes.

Randall charged that the panel recommendation called for a hiring hall, in which jobs would be allocated in rotation and not on merit.

Jack Lawrenson, vice president of the union, asserted that the panel proposal left the companies free to go into the open market if men sent to ships by the unions are incompetent. He attacked the theory that union preference might endanger bringing of vital ore shipments down the lakes.

"To suggest that seamen operating boats on the Pacific, Atlantic and the Great Lakes are not qualified, is unreasonable," he said. "The employers in this case are seeking to freeze the open shop for the duration of the war by raising the hiring hall issue and claiming that it creates a closed shop.

"It might be different if this were the first occasion union hiring was sought to be introduced but the A. F. of L. and C. I. O. both have it in contracts for ocean shipping.

"The Ford Motor Co. hires through a union hall and nobody ever heard of any of their boats breaking in two."

William L. Standard, general counsel of the union, drew a parallel between the operations of ships to Murmansk and Arabia by "our patriotic seamen" and the qualification of unlisted seamen on the Great Lakes to operate bulk cargo vessels.

The maintenance of union membership recommendation of the panel which included dues check-off was assailed by company spokesmen as violative of a Federal law prohibiting deductions from wages of seamen, except for allotment to relatives. They also opposed proposals for overtime in deck departments for more than an eight-hour day and a wage increase for able seamen from $171.60 to $178.

The board's decision will affect but 660 seamen directly, but its terms will be extended to an estimated 6000 employes of 300 bulk carriers on the lakes, both sides anticipated.

Man Reportedly Admits Rape-Slaying of Girl, 10

Cincinnati, Dec. 28 (AP).—Acting Detective Chief Patrick Hayes announced today that Anthony Treat, 57, had confessed the Christmas rape-slaying of 10-year-old Helen Sellers, whose body was found beneath an abandoned freight shed last Saturday.

"I'm guilty," Hayes quoted the man who served two prison terms for sex-crimes. "I took the girl out of the saloon. She followed me for three squares walking behind me."

Lieut. Comdr. Collett Is Missing in Pacific While Leading Plane Squadron, Navy Reports

Capt. and Mrs. C. C. Baughman, Westchester Apartments, stepfather and mother of Lieut. Comdr. John Austin Collett, U. S. N., have been notified that he was missing in action while leading his torpedo plane squadron into action with Jap forces in the Pacific area, it was announced yesterday.

COLLETT

Born on March 31, 1908, in Omaha, Nebr., Commander Collett was graduated from the John Eaton School and Western High School in this city and the Swavely School at Manassas, Va. He took flight training soon after his graduation from Annapolis in 1929 and in 1931 was designated a Naval aviator and assigned to the cruiser. From 1934 to 1936 he was stationed at Honolulu, T. H.

After serving aboard the Saratoga in 1936 and 1937 he was transferred to the Yorktown where he served during 1937 and 1938. Aboard the Savannah in 1938 and 1939 he was the senior aviator. After another tour of duty at Honolulu during 1939 and 1940, he was assigned to a torpedo plane squadron. On March 27, 1942, he was transferred to another torpedo plane squadron which he commanded at the time of the operations resulting in his disappearance.

Although he considered Winterport, Me., his permanent home, Commander Collett was widely known in Washington where he spent most of his schoolboy life. His stepfather, Captain Baughman, U. S. N., is director of special activities of the Bureau of Naval Personnel.

Other close relatives of Commander Collett are a brother, James Collett, also a lieutenant commander in the United States Navy, and his maternal grandmother, Mrs. J. C. Dahlman of Omaha, Nebr., widow of former Mayor Dahlman of Omaha, who was well known throughout the Middle West.

Lieutenant Commander Collett has written three articles on naval affairs for the United States Naval Institute Proceedings the leading technical magazine for naval officers and men. The first of these articles was "The Flying Deck Cruiser," which appeared in November, 1934; the second was "Naval Aerial Menace No. 1," in August, 1942, and the third was "The Aircraft Carrier —The Backbone of Aero-Sea Warfare," in December, 1942.

Allied Actions Blast Hitler's Hope for Winter's 'Creative Pause'

By the Associated Press

London, (Wednesday), Dec. 30. The Allied invasion of North Africa and Russia's great second winter offensive have blasted Germany's hopes of enjoying a "creative pause" during the cold months, the British war office asserted today in its third annual review of the war.

Linking the British Eighth Army's success in Libya with the Tunisian campaign, the Russian offensive and the Japanese failure to oust the Americans from the Solomons, the highly optimistic review declared:

"Not merely was the Oriental partner of the Axis fully occupied and on the defensive in his own sphere at the year's end, but the European members of the Axis were themselves on the defensive."

The year 1942 was declared to have marked a "significant turning point" in the war on land—the passing of the general strategic initiative from the Axis to the United Nations.

The first signs that the Axis flood "might be turning to ebb" came August 31, the Review said, when Marshal Erwin Rommel tried an unsuccessful offensive in Egypt, but it was not until the night of October 23, when Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's British Eighth Army struck the Germans and Italians at El Alamein that "the United Nations may be said to have begun demonstrably to capture the initiative."

The defeat of the Africa Corps, the war office proudly proclaimed, showed the world the first results of Britain's three-year struggle to create an army trained and equipped to fight the Germans on even terms.

Today, it asserted, British infantry is a "mobile master of varied and effective weapons, confident that it has the measure of the enemy."

"It no longer is the plodding, mud-encumbered PBI (Poor Bloody Infantry) of passchendaele nor the ineffectual gallants swept back by the weight of metal to the beaches of Dunkerque."

Discussing the campaign in Tunisia, the review affirmed that there had been "just a chance" that the vanguard of the British First Army, if it swept in fast enough from Algeria, might have been able to seize Tunis and Bizerte before the enemy became too strongly ensconced.

However, the report added, it soon became apparent that the task was too great for the vanguard and that "means more methodical, which had been envisaged," would have to be employed. The advance units were withdrawn early in December from their exposed positions and the main army then proceeded to build up itself and its communications.

Italy, the review said, now is anxiously watching the "threatening build-up of a British army only a few miles from the Sicilian Channel."

"UNTIL I COME BACK"...

We're over 20,000 feet now (the coffee's frozen in the thermos) and that's the Zuyder Zee below. We must be halfway across Holland.

Funny thing what happens to a fellow . . .

Those are the same old stars and the same old moon that the girl and I were looking at last Christmas.

And here I am—flying 300 miles an hour in a bubble of glass, with ten tons of T.N.T.

Somehow—this isn't the way I imagined it at all, the day I enlisted. Don't get me wrong—sure I was sore at the Japs and the Nazis—but mostly, it was the thrill of the Great Adventure.

Well, I know now—the real reasons—why I'm up here paying my first call on Hitler.

It's only when you get away from the U. S. A. that you find out what the shootin's really about and what you're fighting for.

I learned from that Czech chap in London. The refugee, the nice old fellow who reminded me of Dad except for the maimed hands. I was dumb enough to ask about it. "I got that," he said, "for writing a book the Nazis didn't like . . ."

Then there was the captured German pilot who screamed and spit when Izzy Jacobs offered him a cigarette . . . how do fellows get that way?

And that crazy Polish pilot—the fellow who rammed the Messerschmitt. After the funeral I learned what was eating him. Seems as how he had a sister in Warsaw who had been sent to a German Officers' Club . . .

I hope to hell Hitler's home tonight . . . light and wind are perfect.

Yes, sir, I've met 'em by the dozens over here—guys warped by hate—guys who have had the ambition beaten out of them—guys who look at you as if you were crazy when you tell 'em what America is like.

They say America will be a lot different after this war.

Well, maybe so.

But as for me, I know the score . . . you learn fast over here. I know now there's only one decent way to live in this world—the way my folks lived and the way I want to live.

When you find a thing that works as good as that—brother, be careful with that monkey-wrench.

And there's one little spot—well, if they do as much as change the smell of the corner drug store—I will murder the guy.

I want my girl back, just as she is, and that bungalow on Maple Avenue...

I want that old roll-top desk of mine at the electric company, with a chance to move upstairs, or quit if I want to.

I want to see that old school of mine, and our church, just as they are—because I want my kids to go there.

That's my home town . . .

Keep it for me the way I remember it, just the way I see it now—until I come back.

A SHOCK for Mr. Hitler

THIS is no mere play on words. Ours is a war of production . . . of armaments, of guns, of ships, of war materials. It is a war of speeded-up manufacturing . . . of machines and machinery.

And back of machinery is power, . . electric power that keeps production humming. Truly, the crushing blow that will eventually bring the Axis to its knees will come from the power of electricity as much as from the power of explosives. Yes, the stunning effect of this electrical power may well be called "a shock for Mr. Hitler".

Where is it coming from? Whence this gigantic massing of electric power from the Nation's generating plants? Whence the supply to meet the pyramided demand for wires, cables, switches, terminals . . . the thousand and one items that go into the making, transmitting and using of electric power?

It came out of the teamwork that is the American way of doing things. The power companies threw into it their ready-and-waiting plans for plant expansion—for interconnection of systems, for unleashing their pools of power. The electrical manufacturers came through with increased production. The electrical supply warehouses looked after the distribution of equipment to meet the time schedules.

And back of it all, Washington guided, coordinated and applied the pressure where needed. To the War Production Board must go a lion's share of the credit. For the miracle has been wrought. Wherever a machine was installed in America's far-flung war-production line—there the wiring and the power were ready and waiting to start the wheels turning.

The Electric Power in back of American industry packs a wallop—an electrical wallop—a terrific "shock for Mr. Hitler".

Coupons, But No Oil

The OPA has laid great emphasis on the inequity of making a straight percentage cut in the fuel oil allotted to each user. Yet it appears that that is precisely the method used by the Petroleum Administrator for Washington in allotting fuel oil among cities on the Atlantic seaboard. The PAW determined the total amount available for the entire area. Then it divided that total among six zones on the basis of business done by the dealers in each locality last year. That method has left Washington pitifully short of fuel oil because of its phenomenal growth.

Now it is said that this critical deficiency cannot be made up unless fuel oil can be transferred here from some other community, and officials know of no other community with fuel oil to release. Certainly no other city would take kindly to reduction of its allotment so that fuel oil might be transferred to Washington. But this is a poor excuse for unfair reductions which led to maldistribution of the limited supply in the first place. Some means should be devised to take account of the increased population in this last year. As matters stand, OPA methods of allotment of fuel-oil coupons to individuals on an equitable basis are being thwarted in some measure by the PAW's inequitable division of oil supplies among cities. Ration coupons are of little value, in other words, if there is no oil for which to exchange them. Regardless of what may be done to overcome this discrimination against this overcrowded Capital in this month's supply, the quotas for January and the following months should certainly be worked out on a fairer basis than last year's sales records.

Stymied Court

There is real irony in the predicament of the Department of Justice in regard to the Aluminum Co. case. The department has spent a large sum of money and a great deal of energy trying to prove that the company is a monopoly in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The trial, said to be the longest in history, lasted 26 months. A Federal judge in New York held that the department had not proved its charges. An appeal was carried to the Supreme Court and that tribunal was unable to hear it. Why? Because the Supreme Bench had been overloaded with officials straight from the Department of Justice.

Four members of the Court declared themselves ineligible to sit on the case. Presumably they were Chief Justice Stone, Justices Murphy, Reed and Jackson. All of these jurists were previously high officials in the Department of Justice. Chief Justice Stone's service as Attorney General dates back to 1924, but he had previously disqualified himself for an unannounced reason for passing on litigation affecting the Aluminum Co. Justices Murphy and Jackson had been Attorneys General, and Justice Reed had been Solicitor General when the case in question was pending in the Department of Justice.

Last week the department asked the Supreme Court not to dismiss the case in spite of its inability to get a quorum to pass upon it. There is some hope that Congress may pass a bill by Representative Celler authorizing five justices to act when a quorum of six cannot be obtained. That would seem to afford a reasonable way of escaping the present dilemma. But it would not minimize the object lesson which this case carries to the White House. Both the Administration and the Court have been embarrassed because the unwise policy of overweighting the high bench with Government attorneys has left it incapable of functioning in this case. Considering the fact that all of the President's appointees to the Court have been drawn from his own Administration or his close circle of advisers, it is surprising that the Court has not been similarly stymied on many occasions.

This object lesson is particularly in point because one Court vacancy is now waiting to be filled. The President could use that vacancy to give the Court a semblance of balance which it now lacks. The least that can be asked is that this vacancy be given to some jurist who will not have to disqualify himself when cases initiated by the Government in recent years come up for decision.

Brave New World

The complaint in many quarters that Vice President Wallace has allowed his vision to run away with him in sketching the requirements of the postwar world will be hard to sustain in respect of his address on Monday night. In this address Mr. Wallace tethered his vision to a sense of realities. The basic reality which Mr. Wallace has all along recognized is that the people everywhere are going through an experience which partakes far more of a revolution than a war. A world is dead, and another is struggling to be born. Since it will be made in man's own image, we must look to the artificers in the victorious governments for the wisdom not to repeat the mistakes on which the old world foundered.

In this respect the statesmen of the peace will have one great advantage over their predecessors. The people will come out of the present holocaust grimly determined that it shall not happen again. That does not mean, as Mr. Wallace warned, revenge for the sake of revenge. In such a frame of mind the brave new world would be built on sand, and we would be saved from barbarism only to be ushered into a new barbarism. Revenge, it is true, is bound to be sporadic and personal. But anything like organized reprisals would sidetrack the firm peace which common sense, let alone the ravaged peoples, will dictate to the United Nations. We must, as Mr. Wallace said, make sure that the "guilty leaders are punished, that the defeated nation realizes its defeat, and is not permitted to rearm." Upon no other terms could we expect the victims of Japo-Hitlerism not to run amok after the bloodletting is over.

Such terms of peace, of course, will not of themselves insure the end of gangsterism in world affairs. There must be guaranties which we must ourselves hold. Mr. Wallace suggests psychological disarmament. He pleads for the "supervision, or at least inspection, of the school systems of Germany and Japan, to undo as far as possible the diabolical work of Hitler and the Japanese war lords in poisoning the minds of the young." As we recall, the same idea was bruited after the last war by G. K. Chesterton. He was one of the few men, in an era which made a passion out of a return to normalcy, who saw that Prussia was a notion, not a nation. The virus was never extirpated after the last war. It grew up again not only in Germany but also in Japan with the dank luxuriance of the green bay tree.

Accordingly we must not only isolate the virus; we must see that it does not flourish again. Whether the proper treatment is educational supervision, as Mr. Wallace suggests, or any of the other remedies that have been offered, or a combination of all of them—this is for present discussion. The Vice President himself says his ideas are merely suggestive and fragmentary. What is important is that he, a man of ideals, is as realistic in this respect as the Vansittarts in Britain, and, we firmly believe, as the peoples of the United Nations.

But another equally prime problem with that of our treatment of the aggressor spirit is the way the victors shall live among themselves. Mr. Wallace again showed a sense of the realities. His analogy between our world situation today and the American situation prior to the union is so apt that the analogy is recurring more and more in world discussion. We are even more closely bound up together as a world of nations than the States were. They formed a Union, and nothing less than a world council as advocated by the Vice President will be sufficient as the political basis of the next world society. This does not mean that there will be no room for regional political pacts for the settlement of regional differences. But such regional groups must be brought within the framework of world organization. The reality of the new world is its oneness.

Woodrow Wilson recognized this oneness with the same practical vision which Mr. Wallace brings to bear upon our next order of world society. Mr. Wilson was ahead of his time, and the world seemingly had to go through its present travail in order to prove the inevitability of the Wilsonian vision. The league which he espoused was only a failure because, as Mr. Wallace says, the peoples themselves failed. We could get no more out of the league than we put into it, and we put so little of our sovereignty into it that the league became merely a glittering facade of good intentions. Our new contribution must be the equipment of a new world organization with teeth. It must police as well as dispense justice. "Justice without force," said Pascal 300 years ago, "is impotent. Force without justice is tyrannical. We must, therefore, combine justice with force." With such a mandate we could make certain that the peace will be won as decisively as we intend to win the war.

Disputed Territory

The traffic death of Rufus Smith at the Pentagon Building brings up again the boundary question in this jurisdictional no-man's land which has bothered District and Virginia authorities since 1846. Police Chief Kelly's decision to step into this no-man's land and investigate the death pending a decision on jurisdiction is to be commended, though it in no sense solves a long-term problem which has resulted in delays and defaults in administering justice. How the boundary line should be drawn presents its own array of problems. But the use of this land now by thousands of Federal employes makes continuance of letting well enough alone exceedingly unwise. Most recent and perhaps most satisfactory from the long-term point of view of all the plans for solving the issue would be Senator McCarran's proposal for retrocession of Arlington County to the District. The trouble is that our muddled civil governing structure, together with the voteless status of local residents, does not make Arlingtonians eager to embrace it. But there is no other solution corresponding to the realities. Meanwhile we hope that officials on both sides will be public spirited enough to step in when needed, thus preventing the territory in which thousands are working on the war effort from becoming a sort of public reservation where lawlessness and crime may go unpunished.

Big Story

A group of Associated Press editors has decided that the biggest news stories of the year now ending were, in the following order, (1) the opening of the second front in northern Africa, (2) the American counteroffensive in the Pacific and (3) the great Russian counteroffensive in eastern Europe. These editors are certainly in a pretty good position to judge of such things, and probably not many newspaper readers will disagree with their judgments.

Still, coming as it does at Christmastide, the announcement makes us wonder whether any of us is really competent to make decisions as to the relative importance of contemporary happenings. Let us suppose, for example, that some great news-gathering organization had been in existence in the Roman world of the year 4 B. C., which most modern astronomers agree upon as the probable date of the Holy Nativity. As we know, there were at least three men who understood the tremendous implications of this event. But they seem to have arrived at this understanding by methods not covered in the ordinary handbooks of journalism. The same might be said of an equally tremendous event just 33 years later.

And so it is with history in general. It is impossible to read history without being impressed by the well-nigh universal blindness to the true significance of events. One of the great dates of history, one that is memorized by every schoolboy, is A. D. 476, the year in which the great Roman Empire of the West went down. But the Romans themselves, it would seem, scarcely noticed it. They had so many other things to worry about—plagues, earthquakes, scarcity of food and so on—that the presence of a few Visigoths more or less in town must have seemed of no particular consequence.

For the Mohammedan world the greatest of dates is A. D. 622, the year of the Prophet's flight to Medina. But is is a pretty safe assumption that in Arabia itself no special attention was paid to it except by the persons immediately concerned. And in Africa, Egypt, the Levant, Byzantium and western Europe, of course, nobody was so much as aware of it. The sudden death, some time in the fourteenth century, of a few persons from a terrible and unfamiliar malady probably created no consternation outside the village in which it occurred. Nor was there any particular excitement in the year 1438 over the experiments of a German engraver named Johan Gensfleisch. And how the Spanish and Portuguese courts, and also Columbus himself, were deceived over the true significance of what happened in 1492 is now an old, old story.

Skipping down to our own times, it is pretty much the same. The year 1776, of course, has a special place in the American memory, but other great and far-reaching events than our own Declaration of Independence occurred in that year which doubtless were not considered news stories at all. One was the publication of Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations. In that year, too, a fellow-Scotsman named James Watt began tinkering with a contraption called the steam engine. In more recent times the rise of Hitler seemed to be small beer till he became Germany's all highest. And there are plenty of men and women now alive who were alive when Orville Wright made his famous flight at Kitty Hawk in 1903, but very few who can honestly remember to have paid any attention to it at the time.

We wouldn't want to get involved in any argument about such things as the prime, antecedent, proximate, and exciting causes of historic events. But at the same time, and with all due respect to the Associated Press editors, we shall ask you to wait until 100 or 200 years from now for our own opinion as to what were really the portentous events of this year of Our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred and Forty-two.

RIVERS OF LIGHT

I shall go up into the morning; I shall wash myself there,
Bathe myself in the rivers of light.
Truly the dawn is a river of glad water.
It pours like a fountain over the world;
It becomes a deep sea.
Beside the islands of bird-song
And coasts of the trees and capes of wind,
I must rise out of the night to swim in it—
Out of the dark house of the earth
And the narrower houses of men's thoughts.
I shall leap up and cover every part of me
With the quivering waves that run from the sky.
I shall set my sail across it,
With the flags of air promising a fair voyage.

Men Not In Uniform

What can be done to protect the unfortunate male who is not in uniform through no fault of his own?

Let me relate an incident which occurred the night before Christmas, of all times! While standing outside my apartment house waiting for my wife, a soldier bearing the insignia of the Army Air Forces and the rank of a PFC accosted me and asked why I wasn't in the Army. Since he had no authority to put forth such a question, I replied that it was none of his business and that I chose not to answer. This angered him, he became surly, and proceeded to hurl vile unprintable epithets at me. Wishing to avoid trouble, I said nothing further and continued to stand there. He then invited me out to the alley where he said he'd knock my block off. Naturally, I declined and after "cussing" me again and calling me yellow, etc., he finally departed.

This young soldier was about 5 feet 7 inches tall, of slight build, and could not have weighed more than 140 lbs. I am 6 feet 2 inches tall, weigh over 200 pounds, and had I accepted his invitation could have beaten him without too much effort. Despite my size and apparent outward health, however, I have had a serious case of pulmonary tuberculosis which accounts for my being rejected for military service. If the soldier in question sees this, let him be informed that on Christmas Eve I prayed to God that he might have guidance and wisdom. And let him be further advised that after the war, when he is no longer in uniform, I shall be happy to accept his cordial invitation to "step out in the alley," if he is then so inclined.

To you men in uniform who sometimes resent seeing a civilian walking the street who seems to be in perfect health, please remember this before you make any positive accusations: Use your head and be sure of your facts; there is a good reason why he's not in the Army.

A DEGRADED CIVILIAN.

Doubts Official Efficiency

As I understand it, now, all our movements, both in public life and private have to be directed from some bureau in Washington. What we eat, what we drink, and how many breaths we may take per minute . . . Now will you kindly advise me, what bureau or governmental agency, must we obtain permission from, in the event of a death in the family, such as husband, wife, daughter, son, or must we obtain permission to go to their funerals?

I am confident that you will be able to advise me on it. As you are right in Washington, you might know it. It is useless to write to any of the bureaus there, for, I am sure, they don't know their head from their feet.

I wrote last week to the Webster Dictionary Co. to issue an encyclopedia on the different bureaus in Washington, which might help people to orient themselves in that great labyrinth of bureaus. I told them they'd make quite a stake from officialdom itself, which would be glad to know the functions of the various bureaus which now they don't. D. J. DEREFORD.

Shovel Or Carry

In The Post, a week ago, appeared an editorial which, if it has the influence normal to a Post editorial, seems likely to promote serious injustice. It assailed the issuance of A cards now in force as detrimental to more important uses of petroleum fuel, among which is the heating of homes. The trouble is that while heating houses is vitally important, heating them by oil with coal available is a thoroughgoing luxury, and one of the least justifiable uses of our inadequate oil supplies, except for a very small number of old or sickly people. A single half-mile trip carrying supplies home from market without a car is a harder job than the total shoveling of coal needed to run an ordinary house furnace for a week.

Consider the figures. In one instance the value of A-card gasoline was given as 60,000 barrels a day; fuel oil for houses, 340,000 or nearly six times as much. The mean outdoor temperature in Washington for the heating season is 40 degrees, so that heating a house to 70 means heating it 30 degrees. Lowering the house temperature to 65 is saving 5 degrees, or one-sixth of the heat, or enough to yield all the A-card gasoline. If only a third of the oil users convert to coal, that saves twice the gasoline allowance, even with houses at 70.

The motorist is usually unfairly described. He is not "joyriding," nor driving for the "pleasure" of it usually, but for saving, to save time, weariness, damage to clothes from the weather, and the loss of things he cannot get to practically without his car.

WALTER P. WHITE.

Enough Bureaucrats

Answering "Brassback II" and A. D. Newburger, the most effective way of clearing up the difficulties in Washington is not to reappoint Henderson. We've already had more than enough bureaucrats. The real solution is to clear Washington of unnecessary "public servants," 75 per cent of whom are in our "defense" agencies!

And I thoroughly agree with Mr. Swinburne who says that Mr. Roosevelt's trick of "consoling" men the voters have repudiated is, to say the least, a very questionable action! Is Mr. Roosevelt, by any chance, actually encouraging Congressmen to repudiate the wishes of the voters if these wishes don't happen to concide with his? Are we or are we not working for the good of the Nation at large? No one person, no matter how capable or sincere, is competent to be absolute judge in such a situation.

Congress And President

"Time, Time; how it brings forth and devours; and the roaring flood of existence rushes on forever similar, forever changing." The deliberations and conclusions of the Seventy-seventh Congress, which were epoch-making, became the property of historians. It is now the privilege of the people to speculate upon the accomplishments of the Seventy-eighth Congress that convenes January 6, 1943. There are reasons to forecast a repressive influence upon official Washington, and, if present signs are fruitful, an entirely different sentiment will reign on Capitol Hill. The new Congress probably will devote most of its time toward winning the war; it has, however, other obligatory considerations, principally redressing the balance of power between itself and the President.

Many of our Congressmen are perturbed because of the powers which President Roosevelt has been granted and the method in which he is using some of those powers. As evidence of the independence activating some members of the subsequent Congress, an esteemed Democrat—a student of government with 30 years of experience in the House—with other members joined the debate to demand that the Congress reestablish itself as the Nation's chief legislative body.

It is conceded that broad powers should be delegated to the President for the duration to avoid restraint upon our war effort, but this does not mean, as expressed by Representative Sumners, that "advantage may properly be taken of the public peril from without to cause a public peril within." It is probable that he referred to the increasing number of Federal overlords and an overgrown bureaucracy that may weaken the ability of the people to govern themselves. The purpose of democracy is to inspire initiative, foster free enterprise, enrich individual life and extend the brotherhood of man, not to make man a mere cog in an economic or political machine operated from Washington. It is apparent though, that the new Congress is in a mood to resume as our national legislative body. However, our legislators should guard against a serious difference of policy, as a bitter debate at this time over domestic problems might prove ill-advised, regardless of the devotion and loyalty to the cause for which the war is being fought.

Old Machines Of Mars

The first tank rumbled into action against the enemy—462 years ago.

Armor-clad knights inside the vehicle cheered as the massive machine crashed against the fortress—a moment before they were pitched headlong by the collision. When they regained their wobbly footing, they ordered the six horses and the warriors pushing the tank to withdraw the war machine a short distance, and charge again. The lumbering vehicle retreated—then with a surge of fresh momentum tore through the walls of the castle, snapping off the gay pennants atop the tank.

Rubble and surprised defenders tumbled down on the roof. The emerging invaders ran them through with their swords. Muskets in the tank's loopholes shot down an advancing column of defenders. The armored soldiers at the rear of the tank unhitched their mounts, and with the besieging army which had waited outside the gates stormed into the beleaguered town—to victory.

Such must have been the story behind the first tank in military history. It resembled a giant dog kennel on wheels, surmounted by parapets, pennants, and with a monster's head fixed to the front. From the gargoyle's jaws protruded a tongue-like battering ram.

About the time that Columbus discovered America, another Italian, Leonardo da Vinci, needed an engine to power the flapping wings of his aerodynamically sound flying machine. If that kindly genius had possessed a motor—airplanes might have filled the air centuries before still another Italian enslaved his proud nation to an Austrian who needs no motive power "to fly into the air."

In the scientific brain of the magnificent Leonardo was also conceived the helicopter plane and a parachute, both doomed to obscurity because of superstitions and ignorant "wet blankets." Leonardo also wrote in his notebooks "How by an appliance many are able to remain for some time under water. How and why I do not describe my method of remaining under water for as long a time as I can remain without food and this I do not publish or divulge, on account of the evil nature of men, who would practice assassinations at the bottom of the seas by breaking the ships in their lowest parts and sinking them together with the crews who are in them."

Whether Leonardo da Vinci really knew the secret of submarine warfare will always remain in doubt. Perhaps he was just indulging in gruesome fantasy at the time.

But in 1620, the same year that the Pilgrims left Holland and landed on Plymouth Rock, a Dutchman in the service of King James I of England built a vessel which was propelled under water by 12 rowers. For several hours Cornelius Van Drebel's submersible navigated 12 to 15 feet below the surface of the Thames. This successful stunt became only a recorded curiosity until David Bushnell, "the father of the submarine," designed the Turtle, the first sub used for war purposes.

During the Revolutionary War the Turtle attempted vainly to attach a charge of gunpowder to the copper-sheathed bottom of the British man of war Eagle.

Rocket planes were anticipated in 1850 by a device which (an artist depicted) resembled a roaring, soaring hot-water boiler. A lean figure was perched astride this contrivance, his hat flying after him, his cape stiff in the wind, like a black wing. A jet of steam from the tail propelled this streamlined rocket car. A boiling pot mounted on the bow apparently provided the power. And the rider, holding the reins in his hands, could steer his mount by flipping its tail from side to side, as he went swooshing among the birds and power-diving over the village, barely scraping the church steeple.

Hot-air balloons were old stuff to Jacques Etienne Montgolfier, the first aviator, when he invented his aerial carrier 160 years ago. At Versailles he repeated his experiment before Louis XVI. His gaily decorated balloon slowly billowed into shape in the public square before awestruck thousands of Frenchmen. And when the gigantic top filled with hot air Montgolfier signaled for the strained ropes to be cut. Then he went hedgehopping over the chimney pots of the city, swinging to and fro like a gigantic pendulum, in his creaking wicker basket.

Perhaps you're not interested in anything resembling an automobile—now that both your tires and gas ration book are almost worn to shreds. But in the early sixteenth century Albrecht Durer, famous painter and engraver, designed a "victory wagon" for Maximilian I of Germany. Titus had his arch; Maxie had his super-super jeep to celebrate his military successes. The triumphal car was propelled by two husky "pistoneers" who stood on the rear of the juggernaut in their ruffles, ribbons and plumed hats. They pushed and pulled on rods which rotated gears fixed to the heavy, decorated wheels.

The Emperor sat enthroned atop the vehicle, scepter in left hand, sword over right shoulder, and feigning nonchalance while chatting with his royal spouse, who stood facing him, holding the royal banner. Detailed paintings of Maxie's victories decorated the side of the "victoria"—which had four-wheel drive, double reduction gears, "rear engine" with differential action, life-size "radiator" ornament, and warning bell. Ultra-ultra—but like a gaudy carnival carousel.

Nonetheless, those husky pistoneers intrigued me . . . No gas, tires, oil, tags, tax or ration books to worry about. No brakes to be relined, no cranking on winter mornings when the starter motor g-r-r-oans, g-r-r-unts, then . . .

Yes, sir, "give me the good old days . . ." MORRIS FRADIN.

Sparring In Turkey

By Ernest K. Lindley

Chrome For Germany And Us

THE ALLIES are engaged in a spurt to get chrome out of Turkey. Beginning January 8, the Germans become entitled to 90,000 tons a year of Turkish chrome for two years. But under a clause in their contract with the Turks, the Germans may take one-half of their 1943 chrome allotment during the first three months, ending April 8. As Turkey's capacity to mine at that rate is doubtful, all chrome left above the ground and unshipped before January 8 represents a potential German windfall.

LINDLEY

Besides, the Allies need the chrome. The Turkish ore, which assays 48 per cent chrome concentrate, has been the prize of a three-year struggle. The British won the first round in 1939, before the opening of the war. As a by-product of a 400-million-dollar credit for the Turks, which was followed by an Anglo-French-Turkish military alliance, the British got all of Turkey's chrome. But in 1941, the picture had changed. Germany had knocked out France, overrun Yugoslavia and Greece, rolled across Bulgaria to the northern frontier of Turkey and was deep into Russia. Turkey seemed well on the way to encirclement when, in October, a German economic expert, Karl Clodius, arrived in Ankara to present German economic demands. The Turks agreed to supply the Germans with some chrome, but not until the expiration of their contract with the British, which was later transferred to us.

THE START of deliveries to Germany finds Turkey far stronger and more secure than it expected to be when the Clodius agreement was signed. Lend-lease arms valued at millions of dollars have reached the Turkish army. The British-American offensive in North Africa has ended the menace to Suez from the west; the British seem fairly secure in Syria and the Middle East generally; and the Germans have failed to crash through the Caucasus to Turkey's northeastern frontier.

In return for the chrome, the Germans have undertaken to ship weapons to Turkey. They are supposed to send tanks, guns and ammunition worth 15 million dollars for the first 45,000 tons of chrome. The Turks prudently withheld the list of types they wanted until a few weeks ago; and it may be taken for granted they are asking for the German weapons which the Russian and Africa campaigns have proved to be most efficient. The contract specifies that all equipment is to be inspected, approved and valued by Turkish officers at the border before equivalent chrome is released. Allied headquarters await with keen anticipation the contest between Teuton arrogance and Turkish shrewdness. Furthermore, the weapons Germany ships to Turkey will not be available for use against the Allies. It would be a bad bargain for the Germans if they did not need chrome badly—and if they didn't know that the Allies also need it.

Turkish chrome is found mainly in the Taurus mountains, skirting the eastern shore of the Mediterranean. There it has been accessible to our ships. To reach Germany, however, it must be freighted across Asiatic Turkey to the scant shipping of the Axis on the Black Sea, or moved by a round-about railroad through Greece, and then back into Turkey to a single-track bridge spanning the Maritza River at the Bulgarian frontier. The bridge has never been tested for traffic of the volume and weight which now impend.

WE WILL continue to get what chrome is left after the Germans take their 90,000 tons. That may not be much. Turkish output can be stepped up by repairing and improving the mining machinery. The Allies have hesitated to encourage improvements which might help the Germans. And the Turks have not been able to keep up repairs because of the heavy drain on their manpower. The German menace has compelled them to keep one million men under arms, a mobilization corresponding to seven million in the United States.

The Turks complain that the Allies are not sending them enough machinery and weapons. They think they are entitled to special treatment for manning an advance post of the Allies in the Middle East. We, in reply, have pointed out that the Swedes, with no aid from us, are doing no less. These bickerings have been in a friendly vein. Turkish fear of Germany has abated, and the Turks have faith in the Atlantic Charter, and its British and American guarantors. They are concerned, however, about the Russians.

Turkey and Russia are bound by pacts of friendship and mutual aid. But when Ribbontrop went to Moscow to conclude the Moscow-Berlin pact in 1939, Sukru Saracoglu, then Turkish foreign minister, hastened there also to consult. Saracoglu, now Prime Minister, has never forgotten the brush-off the Russians gave him.

The Germans fed Turkish suspicions with phonograph records purporting to repeat German-Russian discussions of seizure of the Dardanelles by the Russians. A year ago, the Russian press inveigled against the Turks for arresting and convicting two employes of the Soviet consulate as conspirators in an attempt on the life of German Ambassador von Papen in Ankara. The Turkish press responded in similar temper against foreign attempts to interfere with the Turkish courts.

Dispatches from Ankara have credited Laurence Steinhardt, American Ambassador, with working out a new Turkish-Russian pact, with the United States as coguarantor. Washington officials say these reports have no basis in fact. Steinhardt has limited himself to the more modest goal of inducing the Russians and Turks to call off their press feud and get on more agreeable terms.

The Once Over

Psycopathic Case

"What seems to be the matter this time?" asked the doctor as he approached the sofa where Elmer Twitchell lay tossing and muttering.

"Forward! Double quick! An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth!" cried Elmer.

"He's been going on like that for two days now," said Mrs. Twitchell.

"We have just begun to fight!" cried Elmer. "Damn the torpedoes, block that kick! Every man for himself! Gangway!"

"There, there," said the doctor, trying to soothe Mr. Twitchell, "calm yourself."

"My left is pierced, my right is under attack, my center is under pressure! I am attacking! The command is forward!"

The doctor came closer.

"Nothing doing!" yelled Elmer, pushing him away roughly. "I was here first. Possession's nine points of law. You and who else? G'wan or I'll mow you down!"

The doctor looked at Mrs. Twitchell. She shook her head hopelessly.

"Jump 'em! Give 'em the old elbow! My only regret is that I have one life to give for modern transportation! One side, please! Never mind that women and children first stuff! Outa my way! Block that kick!"

"Hush!" commanded the physician.

"Hush my eye!" thundered Elmer, now grabbing the doctor and wrestling with him fiercely. "I was here first. Made a special point of getting down early. I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer. You may fire when you are ready, Eastman!"

"Now Elmer, my dear," began Mrs. Twitchell as she sat down on the couch beside him.

Elmer shoved her off onto the floor and took a couple of swings at her head.

"The early bird catches the seat! Scram! They shall not pass! Behold the Rock of Chickamauga! Man the big guns!" yelled Mr. Twitchell with a new fury.

"Take this pill," urged the doctor, leaping onto Elmer's chest and pinning him down for a moment on his back.

"Pills to the right of 'em, pills to the left of 'em, into the coaches piled the six hundred," roared Elmer as he threw the doctor onto the floor and started jumping on his chest.

At this point the police, hearing the uproar rushed in and managed to back Elmer into a neutral corner.

"What's wrong with this guy?" demanded a sergeant.

"All I know," explained Mrs. Twitchell, "is that he went to and from his home by railroad over the Christmas holidays."

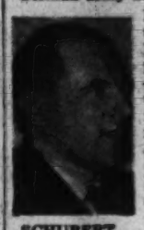
A court has handed down a verdict that if a man tears up mutual tickets on a race he cannot collect. This is the first hint we ever had that anybody had ideas to the contrary.

German Predicament

By Paul Schubert

Hitler's 1943 Problem

THE RUSSIAN winter offensive is closing double pincers upon the supply lines of the German army before Stalingrad.



SCHUBERT

Names like Kotelnikov, Rostov, Millerovo, reappear in the news—the German tide which flooded so deep into southeast Russia in 1942, ebbs back again, leaving the flotsam and jetsam of a campaign that failed.

In North Africa the beaten forces of Marshal Rommel plod westward in their inglorious retreat. Short weeks ago, the name Rommel was one to conjure with in Germany. His position in Egypt seemed the one really bright spot of 1942. His reputation as a soldier was at its peak. Surely, when he struck again, the swastika "Hakenkreuz" banner would go forward to Middle East victory.

Rommel's flight across North Africa is more than the echo of a shattered hope. It is a frantic attempt to stiffen the defenses of the Axis' lone remaining North African stronghold, the strip of coast between Bizerte and Tripoli. Rommel's forces are not retreating westward toward security, but toward the uncertainties of fresh battle—two-front battle, east and west, between the pressure of the British Eighth Army at the east, and the pressure of General Eisenhower's allied American, British and French forces at the west. In North Africa, as in Russia, the Axis is now feeling the searing nip of the steel "pincers" which so recently Hitler took delight in applying.

WHERE ARE the German U-boats and what are they doing?

High German hopes were built upon the power of the U-boats. These submersible raiders were going to isolate America during 1942—were going to make it impossible to transport American armies and their impedimenta across the Atlantic, were going to throttle the flow of supplies from North American factories to America's allies of the United Nations.

Early in the year 1942, U-boat swarms took up this task. They struck at the coastwise traffic off our Atlantic Coast, then at unprotected shipping in the Caribbean and north of Brazil in the zone between the North and South Atlantic. The U-boats had spectacular success . . . as long as their quarry was undefended, or defended by incomplete and improvised guarding forces. As the Germans and Japanese have demonstrated so often since 1939, it is never very hard for a bandit with a gun to do a lot of killing in a street filled with unarmed and defenseless people—most Axis "successes" have been attained by this method.

But once the other fellow arms himself, the blitz-balloon of invincibility is speedily deflated. After six months of painful and feverish labor, effective anti-U-boat equipment and methods were set up.

Hitler's U-boats succeeded in bringing war home to the civil population of the United States—we can thank the Nazi submarines for our fuel oil and gasoline rationing. But the effect of the U-boats upon the American war effort was precisely nil, in terms of any Axis capacity to bottleneck our production and keep us from sending striking-power overseas. As 1942 draws to a close, the U-boat is still a threat, but not a critical threat, nor one that promises to thwart our 1943 overseas war effort.

What about the Luftwaffe?

Air-minded Germany was the country that was going to do all the things claimed or threatened for air power by the fans of military aviation. By daring and ambitious use of aircraft, the Nazi Reich was going to blast Britain's feet to enternity, bomb Britain's factories and cities out of existence, make the British Isles islands of death and destruction for Britain's civil population. The Luftwaffe was going to show the world the meaning of Totalkrieg.

But at the end of 1942, the heavy air raids of this year of war have almost without exception been delivered at German cities—Cologne, Hamburg, Duisberg, Munich, Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Wiesbaden, and many others scarred and blasted . . .

In the air, at sea and on land, the Germans face acute problems. They have lost the initiative. Ironically, the fate which has overtaken them is a penalty for their own striking initial success—the great devouring gains they made in the early days when the opposition to them was paper-fragile. If they hadn't plunged so deep into Russia . . . if Rommel hadn't been so far into Egypt . . . if the U-boat campaign hadn't thrown such a fright into America . . . if the Luftwaffe hadn't blasted London and Coventry and Bristol . . .

If Hitler had some of those punches available now—

CAN the Germans regain the initiative? Can Hitler pull one more Sunday punch out of his arsenal, and by a brilliant stroke smash through the pressure-ring slowly tightening around Germany?

The German dilemma is the need to go on fighting offensively—the need to attack, to follow up victory or defeat alike by fresh attacks . . . the compulsion to strike.

But it is for this very reason that the cornered Nazi beast may be at his most dangerous, now that his back is to the wall as his enemies close in upon him. As he now lashes out, it is with the desperation of fear.

As we enter the year 1943, it is our job to keep up unrelenting pressure upon the German enemy—killing pressure. But as we apply it, we shall have to be eternally wary not to be swept aside by the frenzied blows of the Nazi claws.

Need For Vigilance

By Mark Sullivan

To Restrain War Powers

THE MOST talked-about political subject in Washington is the new Congress that sits next week—specifically, the relation between Congress and the President. About this, News-Week prints an epitome of the local atmosphere:

SULLIVAN

"Every bill submitted by the Administration will be scrutinized for double meaning and interpretation."

This mood of Congress, while increased now, is not new. During the first four years of Mr. Roosevelt's administration, Congress was utterly willing to take bills submitted by the Administration on faith, pass them word for word as written. That phase ended February 5, 1937, when Mr. Roosevelt sent Congress his bill for changing the Supreme Court. Congress refused to pass the bill, and acquired distaste for the method. Since that day, Congress has increasingly scrutinized bills submitted by the Administration, increasingly tended to have the writing of bills done within Congress.

With the coming of war measures, Congress exercised a special vigilance. Not only about the scope of measures, but about their termination. In measures conferring war powers on the President, Congress has been unwilling to leave termination of the powers wholly in the President's hands, has tried to keep some control itself. For example, the pending third war powers bill provides the act shall end "the day following proclamation by the President that the war has ended, or such earlier date as Congress by concurrent resolution . . . may designate."

IF IT were not for this atmosphere of "scrutinizing for double meaning," it would not be worth while to call attention to a passage in Secretary of Agriculture Wickard's address on rationing last Sunday night. It may be there is no double meaning at all in what Mr. Wickard said. He is a plain person, not subtle. His department, however, contains some of the most ambitious wishers for Government supervision of the individual, in peace-time as well as war-time. There seems at least a faint hint of this in one paragraph of Mr. Wickard's speech. Concluding his program for rationing, Mr. Wickard turned to a somewhat different thing:

"As part of the Nation's wartime food program, we should have a well-planned nutrition program."

A nutrition program, on a national basis, means telling the citizen what is good for him to eat. If it is confined merely to telling, to instructing—such a program is beneficial. The Government has long done much of this, usefully, through educational publications of the Department of Agriculture. Much of this sort of teaching is done by domestic science courses, in schools and colleges, in some cases subsidized by the Federal Government—all to the great benefit of the citizen and the country. Of this sort of education, we would be benefited by more.

BUT Mr. Wickard, possibly without conscious intention, has tied the nutrition program to the rationing program, and the latter is compulsory. For the country to accept rationing—that is, accept smaller supplies of food generally—for the purpose of winning the war, is one thing. But to require the citizen to forego certain foods and eat others, because the Government says it knows best what is good for him—that would be something different in spirit and principle.

In Mr. Wickard's speech is another suggestion—again, perhaps, unintentional—which is just the sort of thing that disturbs Congress. Mr. Wickard, citing wartime food control by Britain, says: "An effective food program can mean a rise in the dietary standards of the people as a whole. . . . All in all, British people are better fed now than before the war began, and it is because they are dividing their supplies better than they did in the past."

The suggestion seems to be that food distribution, and "an effective food program," should be carried on by Government, permanently, in peacetime as in war. Then comes, in Mr. Wickard's speech, what appears to reflect an intention or wish that our own rationing system be kept after the war ends: "The nations of the future must see to it that their people have enough of the right kinds of food to eat. We have made a beginning toward this end. Now is the time to go further."

Good relations between the Administration and the new Congress, vital for winning the war, would be helped if the Administration made it always clear that there is no intention to retain war powers indefinitely.

Patterson Says Military Rule Formulated for Occupied Areas

By the Associated Press

Charlottesville, Va., Dec. 29.—Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson said today that the Army already has formulated plans for military government in occupied territories, but emphasized that such controls will be maintained only as long as made necessary by military reasons.

"We have no use for imperialism," he declared in a speech prepared for delivery at graduation exercises of the Army's school of military government here. ". . . when military necessity ceases and civilian government can take control, government by the military authority comes to an end."

Patterson said that fears of "rule by the sword" had been expressed in both the Revolutionary War and again in 1860, that they proved "imaginary, that dire consequences predicted by statesmen of that day never came to pass."

"So," he declared, "when we hear once more the talk about the military wanting to take over, the best thing to do is to keep our sense of humor. There is no military caste in this country."

In stressing the need for military government of occupied territories, Patterson declared that "it is limited, in point of time, to the period of emergency that is closely tied to the conduct of campaign against the enemy. The military leader on the ground must of necessity be in unrestricted control of the resources of the area, in order to push forward the battle line and prevent the foe from recovering what he has lost."

The Undersecretary said that "instances may arise where military operations may be turned into disasters because of the division of authority in the battle zone between the military leader and the governor of civilian affairs. Whatever may be the merits of cooperation in other fields there is no place for cooperation in the theater of active military operations. The job is a military one."

Proposed Milk Price Increase To Be Discussed

Arguments for and against a pending petition for an increase in milk prices in the Arlington County and Alexandria area will be aired at a hearing which the Virginia State Commission will hold in the Alexandria City Council Chamber at 10:30 a. m., January 8.

Producers and producer-distributors will present evidence of producing and distributing costs, while consumers will offer evidence, in support of their opposition to a price increase.

Helfrich, Roosevelt Caller, Sees Favorable Turn in East

Vice Admiral C. E. L. Helfrich, commanding a Dutch naval squadron operating with an Allied fleet in the Indian Ocean, called on President Roosevelt yesterday and said that the war outlook in the Eastern theater now was "encouraging" and perhaps even favorable.

He said he and the President had "talked about the possibility in the future, with no conclusions."

Helfrich, who commanded Allied naval forces in the battle of the Java sea last spring, a battle which resulted unfavorably to the United Nations, said that he and Mr. Roosevelt brought up "nothing from the past."

Helfrich's headquarters are in Ceylon and he left late in November to visit London, make his first trip to the United States, and stop in Australia. He said he was going to Australia on the way back to Ceylon.

With respect to how soon Java and the East Indies might be retaken from the Japanese, the admiral replied to questions from reporters:

"I like to be optimistic but in this case I don't think I can. It will be a long, bitter struggle, I think. As far as I know, the Japs will fight on to the end."

Elements of the Dutch navy and air force, Helfrich asserted, are operating not only in the Indian Ocean, but also under the command of Gen. Douglas MacArthur, United Nations military chief in Australia.

The cruiser Houston, a favorite of the President and one on which he took several sea trips, was lost in the Java Sea battle. But Helfrich remarked that "the Houston did very well before she went down, so there is some consolation."

The admiral was accompanied to the White House by the Netherlands Amhbassador, Dr. Alexander Loudon.

McNutt Urges Shortening of Nurse Training

By the Associated Press

Defense Health Director Paul V. McNutt recommended yesterday that the 1300 accredited schools of nursing throughout the country accelerate their programs and shorten the period for preparation of nurses as a war measure.

McNutt said that letters were being sent the schools by medical and nursing committees under his supervision suggesting programs of 24 to 30 months' duration for wartime training of nurses. Each school was urged to make whatever adjustments it could to conform to the accelerated program.

"The unprecedented demand for nurses for the military forces and for expanding civilian services makes it imperative that student nurses be prepared in the shortest time consistent with sound professional standards," McNutt said.

The letters to nursing schools advised that graduation of students now in school be expedited as much as possible as well, and that programs for incoming groups be accelerated.

5 Deputies Named

Sheriff Robert W. Farmer has appointed five more special deputies to guard property in Montgomery County during the war. They are Leonard Daymude, Read N. Calvert, Clarence W. Lindsey, Theodore G. Parkman and Henry C. Walters. All have taken the oath before Clayton K. Watkins, clerk of the circuit court at Rockville.

WMC Position on Union Fees Pictured Unfairly, McNutt Says

By failing to make public the full text of a letter from War Manpower Commissioner McNutt, Senator Bailey (Democrat), North Carolina, did not give a fair picture of WMC's attitude toward requirements for union membership on war construction. McNutt intimated at his press conference yesterday.

Bailey had released the day before extracts from correspondence between himself and McNutt. The manpower commissioner's letter, he charged, indicated he recognized the "right" of labor unions to "prevent men from working in the common defense unless they pay for the privilege."

Excerpts Not Enough

"He didn't hand you the whole correspondence," McNutt said in response to a question. "I would like to read the entire last paragraph. That is, I don't like excerpts from letters."

"We have tried to deal with the problem which you raise on a case-by-case basis," the paragraph in question said. "Wherever a bad situation exists, we have been successful in handling it by calling it to the attention of the appropriate union officials. They have been on the whole most cooperative in correcting these abuses, and if you could have your constituents advise us of the particular localities and local organizations where improper practices prevail, I am sure that we can see that the situations are corrected."

Identity Not Necessary

"Informants need not identify themselves. All that is necessary is to give us the name and number of the local unions involved. We will, of course, keep all information confidential and under no circumstances will we reveal the source of any information received."

McNutt stressed his statement that claims of improper union practices on war construction have been and will be handled on "a case by case basis."

Asked by a reporter if his reply meant that a "man going into a war plant that is unionized should have to join the union," McNutt said he had answered that question before a Senate committee.

"I see no indication in talking to the union leaders on this," he added, "that there will be any real difficulty where transfers are made."

The WASHINGTON Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

Louis XV for Panama

WITH THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT fighting on vital fronts throughout the world, worried over the problems of taxation, gasoline, oil, and keeping millions of people warm, the State Department has gone to bat with the War Production Board over the urgent and vital question of bedsprings and Louis XV furniture.

DREW PEARSON

These bedsprings and furniture, the State Department contends, are absolutely esential to the conduct of harmonious relations with the Republic of Panama. Without bedsprings, it is inferred, our relations with Panama might break down.

This has been made a matter of official record through letters sent to the War Production Board by no less than an Assistant Secretary of State, Howland Shaw, who demands priorities for shipping bedsprings, tapestries and period furniture to equip the American Embassy in Panama. Regardless of the needs of the American Army in Panama or the difficulty of shipping goods through the submarine-infested Caribbean, or the risk to American seamen, the State Department demands that these bedsprings, tapestries and period furniture reach Panama immediately.

At first the War Production Board turned the request down. Then Assistant Secretary Shaw came back with a second request supported by an elaborate letter.

"The furniture consists of a great number of period designs," Mr. Show wrote, "selected in connection with the furnishing of legation residences abroad, to be executed in accordance with special designs and specifications. Particular care is taken to specify the upholstery methods and materials based on practical experience to insure long-wearing qualities.

"Not only is the relation between the different period pieces of importance, but in addition they must have a relation to the architectural treatment of the room itself. In view of the fact that the particular embassy (Panama) for which the furniture is intended is located in strategic Central America, a country the United States is vitally interested in, not merely by exhibiting the basis of our manufacturing skill but also from the point of view of the importance the embassy will exert in inter-American relations, the entire furnishing scheme ought to be of high standard without the use of untried substitutes or commercial stock items.

"The department is aware of the necessity of limiting the use of scarce materials, yet, on the other hand, the important functions of the embassy are a cause for consideration in determining the merit of application."

Chinese Ceiling Prices

In Arlington, across the river from Washington, a group of merchants met to receive instructions from OPA officials about ceiling prices. Most cooperative of the merchants was a Chinese laundryman, who declared eagerly that he would follow instructions to post ceiling prices.

OPA officials made an inspection tour of Arlington shops a few days later. They found the Chinese laundryman tired but smiling.

"See! I post ceiling prices," he said, pointing to figures painted overhead, "but it's plenty hard paint on ceiling!"

Maryland University Students Take Up Fight by Learning to Meet War Conditions

The University of Maryland is placing emphasis on instruction that will meet wartime conditions. Girls in the College of Home Economics are learning to make the dollar go further. They are taught how to make their own dresses, many times out of renovated materials; how to secure the same amount of nutritive value from a low-cost meal. Boys at the school are enrolled for military training. Under the new program of the Reserve Officers Training Corps all male students, except those physically disqualified, must take military training. Today 1700 students are in uniform at the university.

Landis to Settle Training Problem With ODT

—With CONSIDINE

A Word to Timid Baseball Owners

New York, Dec. 29.—The baseball owners are acting like a lot of timid old maids trying to get up nerve enough to ask Ronald Colman for a kiss. They haven't the faintest idea of what the Government wants them to do about spring training, if any, and they're apparently afraid to ask.

CONSIDINE

One of the soundest of all baseball men—not an owner—told us last night that the only thing for the National and American leagues to do is to form a committee of spokesmen, send it to Washington to talk either to the President, Paul McNutt or Joe Eastman, and find out exactly where baseball stands. Then go to work and line up a season which will conform in every detail to what the Government wants.

Warren Giles of the Cincinnati Club spoke up irritably the other day and demanded to know why Ford Frick hadn't found out something definite about baseball in 1943. A lot of other National League owners are wondering the same thing. If anybody knows less about what will happen to baseball in 1943 than Ford Frick does, it must be Will Harridge, his counterpart in the American League.

Our baseball man said, "We ought to get the best possible men on our committee—men like Connie Mack, Ed Barrow, Clark Griffith, Bob Quinn and the like and let them speak for baseball. I don't think it is an especially good thing to have Judge Landis as a one-man committee because he might start off the session by roundly cursing the Administration.

"The thing baseball must find out in a hurry is just where it stands. I think the Red Sox made a mistake by announcing that they were going to train at Tufts' Gymnasium—before finding out whether or not they could train somewhere in the South. There hasn't been one official word from Washington banning Florida and California training camps. Just a lot of speculation, mostly on the part of confused owners who don't have the correct dope and apparently are afraid to ask.

"If the Government wants ball clubs to train in their own home towns, well and good. That's where they'll train. If it wants them to go to their old training camps—as a kind of entertainment for the troops or seamen stationed near those places—by all means let's go. If it wants ball clubs to get in shape by making a tour of Army camps or naval training stations and playing against service teams, that's fine. But let's find out exactly what the Government wants—and the only way to do it is send a committee to Washington and get it down in black and white."

The fellow is right. Judge Landis' reported decision to call a special meeting of the 16 owners and two league managers is a waste of railroad seats to and from his Chicago office. They don't know anything, and can't act except blindly. The word must come from Washington. The truth of the matter is that baseball has no real guarantee that it will even be permitted to operate next season.

Investigation of Baugh Futile

We think that Elmer Layden's investigation of Sammy Baugh's absence from the Redskins-All Star charity game in Philadelphia Sunday is much ado about nothing. There is nothing in a pro gridman's contract making it illegal for him to stay away from such games.

Baugh didn't want to play in the game any more than any of the other men. Nobody is going to prove that he didn't have a touch of the flu, or that he didn't miss the car, or cab, that was supposed to take him to Dallas to catch a plane for the game. Dick Todd, the other absentee, had what appears to us a valid excuse for missing the game. The way we get it, he asked to be left off the Redskin squad so he could get his affairs in shape before going into the Marines in the very near future. Permission was refused, so he said, in effect, that he just wouldn't play. What can the league do about that? Sue the Marines?

The Redskins and All Stars gave up their Christmas holidays, after a long, arduous (and charity-filled) season. All pros should get paid. They had little or no encouragement, or moral support, from the league. Marshall, the owner of the champion Washington team, hied himself to the sunny banks of California. Few owners showed up for the game in Philadelphia.

Elmer Layden, president of the league, arrived just before the game and—according to a locker-room man—failed to visit either locker room to thank the boys for giving of their time and money. Yet, and this is an everlasting tribute to pro football, the boys went out and produced a swell football game.

The absence of Baugh and Todd didn't hurt the game. Most of the dough that went to the worthy United Seamen's Service Fund came from the game's thick program—brimming with ads. Little, if any, mention was made of the fact that there was even any doubt that Baugh would appear. There were no ticket cancellations. If the fans felt any pang of disappointment when they learned that the great man wouldn't be there, they soon forgot it in the heat of a great football battle. Baugh might have swung the tide of victory to the Redskins—but he couldn't have made the game much better than it was.

As for the so-called "indignation" of the Washington players over the absence of Baugh, well, that won't last long. You can't stay mad at your paycheck.

Side-Kick Springs New Game on the Boys And All Have Fun Amid Popping Corks

Marietta Park, D. C., December 29.

Dear Boss:

I do a lot of joking about my being fat and all that, Boss, but there is a limit. Take the other afternoon, for instance, my darling daughter's mother and I went in a chain store to buy some meat. After she had made the purchase, the butcher looked at me and then asked, "Lady, how could you be so unpatriotic as to bring all that fat and oil up to the meat counter and not turn it in to the Government?"

HAIGHT

Some day I'm going to disguise myself as a side of beef, hang on a hook in the icebox and kick that butcher in the nose. (Notice, Boss, that I'm getting a little sensitive. I didn't say I would disguise myself as a side of pork.)

Tell the truth, Boss, after last night I'm beginning to feel a bit on the thin side. I spent several enjoyable hours at Dick Furneyhough's house. I always enjoy being around Dick. I can relax, and if I keep my mouth closed I'm not conspicuous.

No kidding, Boss, this Furneyhough, by latest count, is 10 points fatter than I am. At least that's the rating given us by Savvy Marino, who greeted me with, "Hello, Mr. Five-by-Five" and then turned to Dick and asked, "What's cooking, Mr. Five-by-Fifteen."

Funny thing, Boss, that when I was talking to you last week about hiring an assistant for me I never thought of Dick. He could relieve me of a lot of problems; such as trying out doubtful chairs or seeing if there is enough space in revolving doors.

He would save me a lot of embarrassment at knife and fork

Bartlett Beaten by Ecuadorian

Tulane Star Bows By 3-6, 6-2, 6-1, 6-4, After Making Strong Stand at New Orleans

By the United Press

New Orleans, Dec. 29.—Francisco Segura, of Ecuador, third ranking amateur in the country, today defeated Earl Bartlett, of New Orleans, 3—6, 6—2, 6—1, 6—4, for the ninth annual Sugar Bowl tennis title.

The hard-fighting Bartlett, Tulane University collegian and Southeast Conference champion, forced th better-rated South American to four sets.

Segura replaces Ted Schroeder, No. 1 amateur in the Nation, as holder of the Sugar Bowl title. Schroeder beat the ambidextrous expert from Ecuador in the finals last year but was unable to compete in this year's tournament.

Victory failed to come as easily as expected for the South American. Young Bartlett played magnificent tennis throughout the match but the drop shots and sizzling services of Segura swung the victory.

Charles Mattman of New York and Bill Talbert of Cincinnati needed but one more game to take the doubles championship when darkness halted the contest in the fourth set with Mattman and Talbert leading, 5—3.

Their opponents are Bartlett, who took up his racquet after a half hour's rest, and Jack Tuero of Memphis, Tenn.

Mattman and Talbert took the first set, 6—2. They also won an extended second set by the score of 8—6. Bartlett and Tuero put up a great effort to take the third set, 11—9, and force the contest further. The fourth set was halted by darkness.

Resume Battle Today

Play will be resumed tomorrow and a single game will give the team of Mattman-Talbert the doubles crown.

Bartlett won the first set after a series of hard-fought games. They split the first six, then Bartlett won the next three to sweep the set.

Bartlett started out good in the second set, taking the first game. But Segura's mastery began to tell as he won the next three, dropped one and took three more tight tilts.

The score of the third set belies the grade of tennis that the diminutive New Orleans star exhibited in his defeat. Again Bartlett took the first game, but that was as far as he could go. Segura won six straight, all close games.

In the fourth set, the money joust, it looked as though Segura might fall victim to the young giant-killer. He won the first game, but Bartlett countered with four straight and appeared traveling down victory's path. Segura's famous drop shots began to tell, and he took the 6 through 10 games to end set and match and annex the Sugar Bowl singles crown.

13 Seniors Get Orange Bowl Starting Call

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Dec. 29.—Thirteen seniors will lend steadiness to the starting teams in the Orange Bowl football game Friday, but underclassmen are to have their fling.

Boston College and Alabama plan to send one freshman, two sophomores and six juniors on the field for the kickoff.

The only freshman to crash the opening line-ups is Boston's John Furey, a 6-foot, 210-pound tackle described by Coach Denny Myers as a "good steady boy."

"Furey is never spectacular," Myers said. "But he's big and strong enough. He's had enough experience after playing in every game during the past season. The boy played well, too."

In addition to Furey, the B. C. eleven will include one sophomore, four juniors and five seniors.

'Bama to Start 8 Seniors

Coach Frank Thomas will field an Alabama team with an edge in experience, since eight starters are to be seniors, against two juniors and a lone sophomore.

Both sophomores who won berths will open the game in the vital left halfback spots—166-pound Johnny August for Alabama and the elusive Red Mangene for the Easterners.

'Bama's starting juniors are the tackles, All-Southern Don Whitmire and Mitchell Olenski.

The left side of the Boston line will be manned by juniors—Charley Furbush, end; Gil Bouley, tackle, and Pat Daron, guard. Quarterback Eddie Doherty also has another year to play.

Battling Redskin, Bruising Dodger Slated for $1000 Winner-Take-All Bout

A third and rubber bout, this time under Marquis of Queensbury rules, between professional football's bitterest personal enemies was in the offing last night when Bob Masterson, end of the Washington Redskins, announced plans for a 4-round scrap with Brooklyn's Perry Schwartz within two weeks.

The affair, according to Masterson, will be held at Uline Arena with Goldie Ahearn, regular matchmaker for the arena, handling details.

The two massive wingmen, who twice have come to blows on National League gridirons this year, will use 8-ounce gloves in the plans outlined by Masterson. The D. C. gridder doesn't insist on that point, however.

"I will fight Schwartz with or without gloves," he said.

Ahearn, it was revealed by Masterson, has already contacted Schwartz and found the Brooklyn veteran dissatisfied with terms readily accepted by the Washington battler. These provide a

Bobo Takes 'World' Title Of Columbus

By the Associated Press

Columbus, Ohio, Dec. 29.—Harry Bobo, 207, of Pittsburgh, slugged out a ten-round decision over Jack "Buddy" Walker, 191, of Columbus, tonight to win Columbus Boxing Commission recognition as the "duration" heavyweight champion of the world.

There were no knockdowns in the slugfest, but both battlers were cut and bleeding at the finish. Bobo, barred from fighting in his home State of Pennsylvania because of poor vision, had enough sight to aim his flicking left into Walker's face throughout.

The long lad from Pittsburgh—he's six feet four—used his height and extra weight to advantage, mauling his smaller foe around the ring. Referee Benny Cowall took the seventh round from Bobo for low punches, but the Pittsburgh battler had plenty of edge, none of the three judges giving Walker more than three of the 10 rounds.

A crowd of 2500 witnessed the contest.

Arm in Cast, Wing Center Plays On

Detroit, Dec. 29 (AP).—Center Don Grosso of the Detroit Red Wings has played six weeks with his left wrist in a cast, it was disclosed today, and now that his secret is out he intends to stay right in line-up. His team's next National Hockey League game is Thursday night against the Rangers at New York.

Grosso reluctantly admitted today that he sustained a bone separation at the spot of an earlier wrist fracture in a collision November 14 with Toe Blake of the Montreal Canadiens. After X-ray examination, doctors put his wrist in a cast, and the heavy glove hockey players wear kept his secret well. The cast stays on three more weeks.

Bulldogs Seem Most Relaxed For Rose Bowl

By the Associated Press

Pasadena, Calif., Dec. 29.—There's one impressive thing about this Rose Bowl football team from Georgia. The boys aren't overawed.

They weren't overawed by the movie studios, or the attention they got anywhere else.

They weren't overawed today, as they got their first glimpse of the Rose Bowl. And it's a pretty safe bet they won't be overawed Friday, when they battle with U. C. L. A.'s Bruins in that same Rose Bowl.

The pressure is almost certain to be on the Bruins. The Georgians are veterans. They've played together for four years, most of them. Sophomore Charley Trippi is the only upsatrt, and it's still doubtful whether he'll be in the starting line-up.

The invaders are bowl veterans. They tore Texas Christian apart in the Orange Bowl last year.

On the other hand, the Bruins not only haven't seen the Rose Bowl—except maybe as part of the audience—neither has any other U. C. L. A. team. And the Bruins are definitely fidgety. The bulldogs, by contrast, are completely relaxed.

It was light drill for both squads today, as the coaches tried to do no more than keep their charges in top condition. The Georgians cavorted around the big saucer in Arroyo Seco, while the Bruins remained at their home field in Westwood. Tomorrow they, too, will move here, to get the feel of the turf.

Conference May Set Up Schedule

High Commissioner Takes Main Step Toward Clearing Spring Muddle

By Charles Dunkley
Associated Press Sports Writer

Chicago, Dec. 29. — Kenesaw Mountain Landis, commissioner of baseball, acting to restore order to uncertainty surrounding spring training plans, was en route to Washington today to confer with the Office of Defense Transportation officials.

From the conference is expected to come the first definite guidance for the major leagues, which since their formal meetings here earlier this month have been hesitant about completing plans for spring training.

On his return Commissioner Landis probably will call a joint meeting of the 16 major league club owners in Chicago for shortly after the first of the year. At that time it is likely the schedule for 1943 will be torn up, and in its place will be substituted a new one now in process of preparation.

Opening Put Off

The new schedule contains the standard 154 games and the original closing date of September 26, but delays opening date from April 13 to April 27. The lost two weeks would be made up by scheduling additional doubleheaders, probably in the form of twilight-night twinbills.

Each club in the two leagues is permitted to play 14 night games with the exception of Washington, which was granted 21, and this will allow a number of late afternoon and evening doubleheaders.

The Chicago White Sox and the Chicago Cubs, complying with the ODT request for curtailed spring training jaunts, today decided to train together at French Lick Springs, Ind., 278 miles south of Chicago. French Lick, long famed as a mineral spa, can be reached by a daytime ride from here, thus eliminating all use of pullmans. Inasmuch as it is within 50 miles of Louisville and close to Indianapolis and Evansville, Ind., it is probable the two teams will play exhibition games in those cities.

Chicago Surveys

A delegation from both Chicago clubs will visit French Lick next week to survey sites for baseball diamonds. One already is in existence and others are proposed on a golf course and airport nearby.

Will Harridge, president of the American League, said today he was certain that the majority of his club owners would readily agree to shaving two weeks from the original start of the season. The new schedule would call for 22 Sunday dates instead of the customary 24.

In New York Ford Frick, president of the National League, said he understood three optional schedules for 1943 had been prepared to be held in readiness for any eventuality that might force the abandonment of the one already adopted.

But he added no decision had been made, so far as he knew, on any one of the revised programs and expressed the belief that all clubs in the National League would desire to make every effort to open the season April 13 as planned.

Besides the 154-game schedule opening April 27 and closing September 26 he said he believed one calling for 140 games was under consideration and that another provided for a late opening with the season being extended till October 3.

Red Ruffing Gets Army Call As 6-Toed Noncombatant

Los Angeles, Dec. 29.—The New York Yankees lost their star pitcher today to a bigger Yankee crew—the Army.

Charles (Red) Ruffing, mound mainstay of the oft-times champions, was certified 1-B after a medical examination, and goes in for noncombatant duty.

A coal mine accident in Nokomis, Ill., when he was only 15, kept Ruffing, known as Rufus the Red, from 1-A classification. He lost four toes in the mishap, but went on to become one of the game's great hurlers.

Last fall he completed 19 years in the major leagues, 13 of them with the Yanks.

Few of his friends knew Ruffing had received his induction papers. He reported for his physical examination with no fanfare, commenting:

"There's only one way to feel. We've got a different battle on our hands."

He said he was "a bit tired of

True Lass, Sure Fire Are Victors

Former Pays $127.10 In First Race to Start Big Pay-off; 2769 Attend Sport

By the Associated Press

Tropical Park, Fla., Dec. 29.—An otherwise dull afternoon—the usual thing on Tuesdays—was enlivened here this afternoon when the daily double provided a payoff of $1288.20 for two, easily highest of the current session but not close to Florida's record return of more than $7000, made at this track some years ago when a Jersey truck driver named Harry Topser had the lone winning ticket.

Five tickets were sold on today's long-shot combination of True Lass in the first race and Sure Fire in the second. Johnny Breen was astride both winners, duplicating the feat, earlie in the meeting, of Apprentice Jimmy Thornburg. However, Breen's combinaiton paid a far bigger pr e.

The first thrill for the light-wagering crowd came when True Lass, far back in her only two previous starts at Bowie in November, streamlined it to a length success in the opening dash for a return of $127.10. That bay filly completely upset the dope. Then Sure Fire, a $12.90 for two shot, was guided to a head score over Quick Baker in the second race, with Cinema Queen third, three lengths out of it.

Breen had Sure Fire under early wraps, not too far off the leaders. He urged the mount into third place around the bend and the 2-year-old plater just got up in the final strides to overtake the pacemaking Quick Baker, a long shot.

The attendance today was 2769.

Joe Burger, a shifty juvenile development of Florida racing early this year, broke a losing streak by defeating five others of his age in the fifth dash. Installed favorite at slightly under even money, the son of Infinite needed a strong ride by Billie Thompson to beat Good Lawyer a head. Momentito, the leader to the stretch, weakened when Joe Burger and Good Lawyer moved up together to dispute the issue in the drive home. Four lengths separated him from the front pair.

Little Scenes and Incidents Dot the Year's Sports Trail

Higbe Freezes, Louis and Conn Fraternize, Holy Cross Furnishes Surprise

By Whitney Martin

Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Dec. 29.—It's the little things that come to your mind in thinking back over the sports year, such as:

Kirby Higbe, Brooklyn Dodger pitcher, bending to pick up the ball in the final game at Philadelphia, and freezing in that position as he glanced at the score board and saw that the Cardinals had just scored enough runs at Chicago to ruin any Dodger hopes of tieing for the National League pennant.

Joe Louis and Billy Conn, booked to slug it out against each other in a title fight which subsequently was stopped before it started, chummily pairing off and chatting away like long-parted bosom friends when here as exhibits "A" and "B" in the completion of plans for the bout.

The way his teammates swarmed over Johnny Beazley after the final out in the final game of the World Series. He took a worse beating from them than the Yankees ever were able to hand him.

Holy Cross Amazes

The look of downright amazement and incredulity on the faces of football writers in the Yankee Stadium press box as the first returns of the Boston College-Holy Cross game were received, and the "there ain't no such animal, but there it is" attitude when the final score was verified.

Joe Gordon lying prone and inert for a few seconds after Walker Cooper's throw had nipped him off second to ruin the Yankee's victory hopes in the final World Series game, the picture accompanied by the idea that the names he was calling himself wouldn't look good in a family newspaper.

The obvious sincerity of rugged Hans Lobert as he remarked at the start of the season that the goal he had set for his Phils was to win half their games, and the impression that he wasn't setting a goal; he was fishing for a miracle.

Fritzie Zivic stretched on a rubbing table and spouting words without benefit of comma, period or semicolon, and frankly puzzled over the personal impression he was getting better as he grew older. And his eventual solution that "I guess I'm getting smarter."

Jack Dempsey trudging down a company street at the Manhattan Beach Coast Guard station, pushing a bicycle through the rain and mud and dusk toward his office of athletic director, and the idea that no man could put more spirit into his job.

Plump Al Weill shaking and perspiring under the ring apron at Madison Square Garden and afraid to glance upward where his Marty Servo was giving Rab Robinson a whale of a battle, and Al's repeated question to those watching: "How's he doing?"

The amazement when a hulking giant like Lou Nova went down and stayed down when hit by the apparently routine punches of Tami Mauriello, and the first impression that he was taking the easy way out. (He had a busted rib and miscellaneous other injuries.)

The picture of the Navy line not only stopping the Penn backs on the one-foot line, but making them rear upward like an automobile climbing a telephone pole. Leaving the impression that if Army hoped to beat the Middies it had better plot to do it by air.

Marveling that Abe Simon could talk intelligently in his dressing room after taking a cruel beating from Joe Louis, but detecting one sign of befuddlement. He insisted the bout should have been allowed to continue.

Dear Al:

Trainer Roy Waldron, who startled the turf world when he won the Kentucky Derby with Gallanadian, holds a strong hand in the more important stakes at Hialeah—the Widener, the McLennan, the Flamingo and the Hialeah Juvenile. His chief hope is the 3-year-old colt, Dogpatch, by Bulldog and Rose Leaves. Dogpatch is a product of the Coldstream Stud, but is one of the 18 horses that will be campaigned during the 96-day Florida season by Mrs. Ethel V. Mars, of Pulaski, Tenn., and Chicago. The Milky Way Farm colors will be seen for the first time in this sector. While Dogpatch has performed in such notable stakes this year as the Jerome Handicap, the Withers and the Swift at Belmont, the Kentucky Derby and the Arlington Classic, his best effort came with the running of the Shevlin Stakes at Aqueduct in June. In this race, a mile and one-sixteenth, he conquered the highly regarded Fairaris, Trierarch, Rascal, Zaca Rose and Enter. As a 2-year-old Dogpatch drew considerable attention when he finished second to Requested in the Babylon Stakes at Aqueduct. His stock rose to great heights when he defeated several outstanding juveniles in the Futurity Trial at Belmont Park, including Devil Diver, Contradiction, Remillies and Shut Out. He went into the coveted Futurity a week later one of the choices, but racing luck was against him and he finished unplaced, the pot of gold going to the Calumet Farm's Some Chance. Others which Trainer Waldron will send to the races for the Milky Way chocolate queen are Black Raider, Double S., Legalia, Diah, Allan F., Vacuum Cleaner, No Wrinkles, Deserving, Son Forever, Up the Creek and six coming 2-year-olds. Would have liked to had my mits on one of those $1,288.20 daily doubles at Tropical yesterday. And I wish I could see you on the rail.

BILL.

Small, Green U. N. C. Squad Visits Terps

The University of North Carolina's present basketball squad is billed as the smallest and greenest in Tarheel court history but its three-game record to date is a warning for Maryland to be prepared for their New Year's night meeting at College Park.

Carolina opened with a 35-34 triumph over McCrary's Eagles, always one of the strongest unlimited teams in the State, and they followed with a 42-25 victory over the Charlotte "Y" and then turned back Fort Bragg, 40-28.

The Tarheels have been idle since December 8 and Friday's game is their first collegiate test of the year. They move to Charlottesville Saturday night to meet Virginia.

In other games of the weekend involving local teams Georgetown plays St. Bonaventure in Buffalo Friday night and on Saturday meets Scranton, Pa., there. George Washington visits the Quantico Marines Saturday night.

North Carolina lost all but one of its lettermen, Lewis Hayworth, a reserve guard, while 12 of the 17 court candidates are trying for the varsity for the first time. Tallest men are Bob Altemose and Larry James at 6-feet-2. One of the reserves is Vic Sexias, ninth ranking tennis player.

Bill Lange is back for a fourth year as coach of the Tarheel dribblers and his previous teams have all boasted winning records. Last year the Tarheels won 10 and lost 7.

Bob Rose, captain and all-Southern selection was the principal loss while other lettermen who did not return for various reasons were: George Paine, Julian Smith, Bon Wilson, Bobby Gertsen, Reid Suggs and Ed Shytle.

Masterson Set To Settle Grudge

purse of $1000 or 20 per cent of the gate to the winner.

Redskin fans remember the start of the Masterson-Schwartz warfare. That was during an early season game at Ebbets Field when Schwartz complained to the "Skins" Coach Ray Flaherty about the excessive use of his opponent's elbows. Unprintable words were tossed across the line along with a few punches before Schwartz was hurt and helped from the field.

Again the grudge flared on November 22 when Schwartz came out of his crouch with fists flailing and chased Masterson some 15 yards before teammates and officials could stop it.

"My back-pedaling then," Masterson revealed last night," was by instruction. I had been told not to hit back if Perry started swinging. The game, I was told, was too important to our championship hopes for me to get myself thrown out. You might say I owe Schwartz a few socks."

As they say in legitimate boxing circles, Masterson will have a decided pull in the weights for the big brawl. The former Miami (Fla.) University lineman will go in at about 220 pounds to Schwartz' 195. Masterson will also have a half inch advantage in height. The matter of comparative chest, bicep, wrist, waist, thigh and ankle measurements will be announced later. They are not included in the National League manual.

New Game Gets 'Pounds' Haight

time. I could just let him set the pace and then keep one egg and one slice of ham behind him.

He can think of the most interesting games, too. Last night he had a brand new one called "Motorboat." It was a lot of fun. Dick pulled corks out of champagne bottles so fast the "pops" sounded like a motorboat engine.

Everybody sat around and said, "Put, put, put, put some in my glass." As soon as you said "Pufih" instead of "put," you were eliminated due to engine trouble.

Well, Boss, Walter Haight was over his head trying to run in the Champagne Stakes.

It wasn't long before I "pufthed" when I should have "putted."

But you know me, Boss, always quick with ingenuity. I tried to get back in the game by using rye in my motorboat. The motor turned over a few times, but all the darned thing would say was "hoofth."

Nice game, this "motorboat." Which reminds me, on second thought, perhaps it would be a bad idea if you hired Dick as my assistant. Suppose he showed up at our office some night with a keg of beer and started a game of "printing press."

But all kidding aside, Boss, Dick Furneyhough is a jolly fellow and I like him. As ever,

Warner Rolls 163

The Men's Major Bowling League at Clarendon found Norman Warner the leader last night with his 163 single and 421 set which sparked McGonegal Plumbers to high team game of 634. His team dropped a pair to A. H. Cohen when Hal Babbitt came through with individual scores of 160-408.

'New' Brewer Five Preps for Inaugural

Service Body Gets All Receipts From Home Games; Heurich, Jr., Pays Bills

The gross receipts from all home games of the newly formed U. S. O.-Heurich Brewer professional basketball team will go to the United Service Organizations, it was emphasized yesterday by Manager "Whitey" Wilson as the team prepared for its opening clash with the Bolling Field Bombers at the Heurich gym Sunday.

Starting time will be 3:30 with a fast preliminary scheduled at 2 p. m.

Wilson emphasized that Sponsor Chris Heurich, jr., will shoulder all operating expenses. A nominal admission fee of 5 cents will be required of civilians and the U. S. O., through Public Relations Representative John Schoolcraft, has been invited to place its own men on the gate to collect these paid admissions.

"Through the generous cooperation of Chris Heurich we are making this a 100 per cent patriotic movement," Wilson said last night. "I believe this move will go far toward popularizing professional sports locally, and certainly should keep professional basketball alive.

"We are bringing in some outstanding teams, and would like nothing better than to play host to thousands of servicemen during 1943. We expect to play at least 12 games, and will overlook no opportunity to keep everyone well entertained."

George Knepley, one of the greatest basketball players ever turned out by the University of Maryland, had joined the Brewers yesterday and will oppose Bolling Field Sunday. It also was learned that Petey Rosenberg, formerly of the Philadelphia Sphas, and Ben Kramer, a popular star of the Brewers, both will be included in Sunday's line-up. Both are stationed at nearby military camps.

Coach Mack Posnak, Wilson, "Reds" Auerbach, Bill Bornheimer, Ben Goldfadden and Charley Schmidli are other well known players who are to represent the Brewers.

Wilson further announced that the crack Fort Belvoir team will be met a week from Sunday, January 10, and that negotiations are under way for games with Fort Meade, Fort Monmouth, Camp Dix, Aberdeen Proving Grounds and the Philadelphia Sphas, as well as with other outstandnig service and professional clubs.

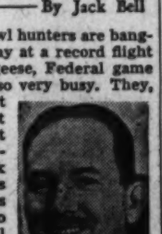
Out Hunting...

By Jack Bell

While wildfowl hunters are banging merrily away at a record flight of ducks and geese, Federal game wardens are also very busy. They, however, are not banging away at the birds, but are now vigorously after duck blind owners and wildfowlers who refuse to obey a Federal regulation that prohibits the baiting of wild ducks and geese: "... by means, aid, or use directly or indirectly, of corn, wheat, oats or other grain or product ... placed, deposited, distributed, scattered, or otherwise put out whereby such waterfowl ... are lured, attracted, or enticed. ..."



JACK BELL

While it has always been the contention of Maryland duck hunters that this "no baiting" can not be fair when the Federal regulation further goes on: "... it is not intended to forbid the taking of such birds attracted by growing or standing crops of grain or by harvested grain fields so long as such crops are not manipulated ... so as to cause such grain to be placed, deposited, scattered, or otherwise put out, as aforesaid. ..."

While on the other hand, the mere finding of grain around a shooting blind, however ignorant of the fact the hunter may be, is sufficient evidence to "libel" a blind and cause the arrest of any such persons so using it.

Under this "no baiting" law set by Federal decree, no one anywhere is allowed to bait wild waterfowl, because Federal migratory regulations supersede State laws. However, present Maryland game laws do not prohibit shooting over baited duck or goose blinds. That is the situation as it stands today.

With many duck and goose shooters ignoring the Federal regulation and taking a chance that they will not be caught, Federal wardens are now cracking down and with the best of shooting days ahead it is going to be "closed days" on some of the finest shooting grounds on the upper Chesapeake.

Already blinds in Back and Middle Rivers have been closed and others over on the eastern shore and the head of the bay. Less than 10 days ago the whole of Miller Island at the mouth of Middle River was closed, even to the extent that no one can even set foot on the island with a gun for the balance of the season.

Last year Federal authorities were somewhat lenient in the enforcement of the "no baiting" regulation by only padlocking blinds "suspected" of baiting for only a short period of a week to 10 days. This year baiting is considered far more serious. Any blind suspected of baiting is closed for the season. A number of cases have already been booked for the Federal courts. Just last week wardens suddenly closed in on a blind suspected of baiting practices and the shooters, taken by surprise, left behind their decoys, coats and even their guns. The wardens confiscated the guns and are holding the coats as evidence.

Each year duck hunters and blind owners generally in Maryland have asked Federal game officials for a modification of regulations to permit baiting and the use of live decoys, each time being denied the privilege.

The present situation is only bringing discredit upon the shoulders of Maryland sportsmen, and continued violation is hardly an effective way to bring about a change.

The situation is being further muddled. Federal agents every day are hearing of charges and counter charges of malicious baiting of blinds, because of pre-season squabbles between gunners who've fought over some site for a ducking blind. Also some "innocent" shooters claim that strong tides have caused grain in the neighborhood of some other blind to drift over their shooting areas. It is, however, conceivable that such a thing can happen.

Many duck hunters and blind owners would be in favor of some form of shooting over baited areas which would prevent violations. The most general suggestion for this modification is to permit the baiting of blinds, but to curtail the shooting to three days a week.

Tropical Refuses To Reduce Purses

Tropical Park, Fla., Dec. 29 (AP). Charles A. Munn, secretary-treasurer of the Gables Racing Association, this afternoon stated that there would not be a cut in Tropical Park purses.

"I regret that such reports have caused a feeling of uneasiness among horsemen," said Munn, "and I wish to state with all possible emphasis that we have no intention of departing from our schedule, as laid down prior to the opening.

Whirly Will Perform At Tropical New Year's

Tropical Park, Fla., Dec. 29 (AP).—Warren Wright's champion money winning colt, Whirlaway, will be breezed between the third and fourth races on the New Year's Day morning program here, it was announced by Director of Racing Gerald Brady this afternoon. The added attraction is expected to draw extra fans to the Gables course, eager for a glimpse of the horse that has earned a total of $360,911. Whirly will breeze with the Calumet Farm silks up.

Glovers Enter Semifinals; 16 Bouts Set

Seven senior and nine novice bouts will be offered at Turner's Arena tonight when the tenth annual Golden Gloves boxing tournament swings into its semifinal round at 8:30 o'clock.

Probably the hottest warfare of the tournament will be seen as determined youngsters attempt to fight their way into the championship round.

Resting squarely on top of tonight's hostilities will be the 147-pound senior event in which the highly regarded Red Vernon, representing the Washington Boys Club, pits his cleverness and skill against the powerful punching of the Merrick Club's Clifton Fones.

Vernon, defending champion and a finalist in the New York Golden Gloves last January, admittedly is the better boxer, but faces in Fones one of the deadliest punchers in the Golden Gloves field.

Celinski Faces Battle

Pete Celinski, defending 135-pound champion from the St. Mary's Boys Club of Alexandria, also faces a formidable foeman in Tommy Larner of the Washington Boys Club.

Larner, a protege of the hard-hitting Lou Gevinson, who once ranked with the greatest of Golden Glovers, is conceded by many as an excellent chance of coming through with an upset.

At 126 pounds, Dick Mullen, former 112-pound Gloves champion and a combination boxer and puncher from the National Training School, engages a rugged boy in the Apollo Athletic Club's Charley Pullman, a nephew of Phil Furr.

Rough Scrap Looms

Although Mullen will rule the favorite on the basis of past performances and more experience, the dangerous Pullman is trained to the minute and ready for a rough scrap.

The seniors tonight will be fighting for the trips to the New York tournament rewarding the champions of their various classes. Novices will be competing not only for individual and team awards going to the winners, but also for the handsome trophy annually awarded the outstanding novice by Representative Fred A. Hartley.

Tonight's pairings:

NOVICE DIVISION

118 POUNDS—David Lindsey (Torpedo Station) vs. Dominick Ortiz (National Training School); Jack Golomb (Jewish Community Center) vs. Eddie Funk (Washington Boys Club).

135 POUNDS—Billy Waugh (National Training School) vs. John L. Sullivan

Sporting News Picks Rickey, Southworth In Poll; Joe Gordon Still Most Valuable

St. Louis, Dec. 29.—Championship success of the St. Louis Cardinals was reflected today in the selection by the Sporting News of Branch Rickey as the No. 1 executive of the year and Billy Southworth as the outstanding manager in major league baseball.

Without denying Joe Gordon's claims to honors as the most valuable player in the American League, the baseball weekly passed over the New York Yankee second baseman and named Ted Williams as the outstanding player of the 1942 season.

While conceding that Williams may not have measured up to the standards set for qualification as the most valuable player in his league, the Sporting News said the Red Sox outfielder stood out in a class by himself for individual performances.

Williams led the American League in batting percentage, home runs, runs scored, runs batted in, total bases and bases on balls. His fielding percentage also topped all outfielders appearing in more than 150 games.

There could be no doubt about the choice of Southworth for managerial acclaim after Bill the Kid's feat in bringing his fleet-footed youngsters to a National League pennant victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers and an unexpected triumph over the Yankees in the world series.

Rickey, former vice-president and general manager of the Cardinals and now president of the Dodgers, was given credit for furnishing the players that made the championship possible for Southworth.

Williams and Southworth are the first in the annual citations to be named two years in succession. Rickey was selected in 1936.

In the minor leagues, Bill Veeck, president of Milwaukee of the American Association; Eddie Dyer, manager of Columbus of the same league, and Dick Barrett, pitcher with Seattle of the Pacific Coast League, were named the No. 1 men of the year.

Dyer received top ranking for leading the Columbus Red Birds successfully through the American Association playoffs and in the Little World Series with Syracuse of the International League. Veeck was hailed for promoting and reviving baseball interest in Milwaukee.

Barrett, a veteran of 18 seasons in professional baseball, was selected because of his remarkable record of yielding only 1.72 earned runs last season, the best effort in either the majors or the minors; his 27 victories against 13 losses, and his league leadership with 178 strikeouts and 330 innings pitched.

The 35-year-old pitcher has been purchased by the Chicago Cubs.

baseball anyway."

The Yankee pitcher, 6 feet 2 inches tall and weighing 234 pounds, was A-1 in every respect except for his foot, First Lieut. Hal C. Jenkins, chief medical examiner, said.

Since baseball season ended, Ruffing, whose home is in Long Beach, has been employed at the Vultee Aircraft factory.

Ruffing made his major league debut with the Boston Red Sox in 1924 and still was a good enough hurler to be Manager Joe McCarthy's mound choice for the opening game of the 1942 World Series.

He failed to stick with the Red Sox that first season but returned the next to win nine games while dropping 18. He remained with Boston until May 6, 1930 when he was traded to the New York Yankees for Outfielder Cedric Durst.

It was while with the Yankees that he developed into one of the game's best righthanded pitchers, winning seven world series games and compiling a major league pitching record of 258 victories and 216 defeats.

While at Boston he twice was the league's "losingest" pitcher, with 25 defeats in 1928 and 22 in 1929. With the Yanks, however, he was named to the all-star major league team by baseball writers in 1937, 1938 and 1939.

In contrast to the majority of pitchers, Ruffing was an outstanding batter and was often used in pinchhitting roles.

Hurling for the Yankees in the 1942 world series, he defeated the St. Louis Cardinals and Morton Cooper in the first game, 7 to 4, although knocked out of the box in the final frame and was defeated in the fifth and deciding contest by young John Beazley, 4 to 2.

Stanford, Great Lakes Fives Clash Tonight

Game Holds Sugar Bowl Sports Spotlight; Tulsa, Tennessee Elevens Await Kick-Off

New Orleans, Dec. 29.—Players of two great basketball teams—Stanford University and the Great Lakes Naval Training Station—prepared today for a Sugar Bowl event that got a momentary spotlight over the Tennessee-Tulsa New Year's Day football game.

While the footballers were closing out their last hard workouts in training camps on the Gulf Coast, the basketball teams came to town for a practice session to get the feel of Tulane gymnasium where they will mix tomorrow night.

The Sugar Bowl backers believed they had the cream of amateur cage teams. Stanford was national collegiate champion last season and the Great Lakes crowd, winner in 9 out of 10 games so far this season, included the best of Midwest stars.

The Stanford Indians boast a crew of giants, with Ed Voss at 6 feet 3½ inches standing only 1½ inches above his Teammates Howie Dellmar and Jack Dana. Voss was the team's top scorer last winter. Against the kind of reaching basketball played by these long-legged boys, the Navy Bluejackets can put on the floor a team that has scored an average of better than 50 points a game this season.

Tulsa Underdog

Meanwhile, the football teams were about ready for a pregame rest. Tulsa's Coach Henry Frnka ran his Undefeated Golden Hurricane through offensive maneuvers and scheduled light drills for Wednesday and Thursday. The Tennessee Vols, hampered by a couple of training injuries, planned about the same program.

In New Orleans—where the week-long midwinter sports carnival which is climaxed by Friday's football battle is being supported locally because of wartime travel troubles—Tulsa was an underdog but was carrying the hopes of local fans.

Despite the fact that Tennessee is the South's own and Tulsa comes fro mthe Southwest, most local fans were pulling for the Hurricane Passing Circus led by All-American Glenn Dobbs. Tennessee was favored in the betting because of its superior power offensive.

N. C. A. A. Decides Fate of Collegiate Athletics Today

By the United Press

New York, Dec. 29.—The future of wartime college athletics may be decided tomorrow at a special meeting of National Collegiate Athletic Association leaders here.

At this one-day huddle a resolution will be adopted providing probably for the continuance or discontinuance of various N. C. A. A. tournaments and championship meets.

Preparatory to tomorrow's session, representatives of the N. C. A. A. dined with service officials this evening and discussed problems confronting college athletics as a result of (1) the Government's taking over from 200 to 300 schools; (2) extension of the draft to 18-year-olds, and (3) transportation difficulties.

A. A. U. Indoor Track Meet Set Outdoors

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—Blame it on the war—but the indoor track and field championships of the Metropolitan A. A. U. will be decided outdoors this winter.

Because suitable indoor sites are not available the annual meet will be held in two sections, first Saturday afternoon, January 16, at New York University's Ohio Field, and second Saturday afternoon, January 23 at Columbia University's South Field.

Both have board tracks.

Fancy Stuff Declared Out In Cotton Bowl

By the Associated Press

Dallas, Tex., Dec. 29.—Texas and Georgia Tech will forego any surprise tactics, their coaches say, in the Cotton Bowl football game New Year's Day and ride along with the formations used in the past season.

Coaches Bill Alexander of Georgia Tech and D. X. Bible of Texas say they positively will have no new plays and a glimpse of the teams practicing bears them out.

Texas worked on passes and ground offense—and there was nothing new about the way they did it. Tech got in a little headknocking as Alexander called for practice behind locked gates. It was not an out-and-out scrimmage but there was a lot of bodily contact as the boys put on pads to work at protecting the kickers and practice tackling.

There really is no reason for either team to plan new plays since neither scouted the other and all they know is what a coach or former player here and there told them about the other's offense.

Cotton Bowl officials reported a marked upturn in ticket sales. It was reported that sales thus far this week equaled that for the same period last year.

Rangers Halt Bruin Streak

By the United Press

Boston, Dec. 29.—The surging New York Rangers gave the Boston Bruins their first defeat in 11 home games tonight by winning, 5-3, before 13,500 fans—the largest Boston Garden crowd in this wartime National Hockey League season.

The Rangers completely outclassed the Bruins, scoring twice in the first and second periods and once in the thrilling third during which Boston piled up three goals.

West Squad Scrimmages For Jan. 1 Game

San Francisco, Dec. 29.—Scrimmage of the rock 'em, sock 'em type enlivened the Western team's practice today for the East-West charity football game New Year's Day.

While Cocoaches Don Faurot of Missouri and Orin Hollinbery of Washington State searche' for weaknesses, the Westerners divided into two squads and banged into each other at Stanford University.

Drill on T-formation plays, installed yesterday, continued at top speed to enable the West to alternate this type of attack with the single wing. The T-formation is a Faurot specialty. He worked with a first-string backfield composed of Tom Roblin, Oregon, quarterback; Bob Kennedy, Washington State, left half; Bob Steuber, Missouri, right half, and William Zapalac, Texas A. and M., fullback.

The Eastern workout at Santa Clara offered less action. Instead of bumping into each other, the East squad engaged in dummy scrimmage.

Coach Andy Kerry of Colgate was back after nursing a cold for several days. Dick Wildung, All-America tackle, from Minnesota, was pronounced fit after the treatments on an injured ankle.

The Eastern attack will center around the pass-throwing skill of Paul Governali, Columbia halfback. The Westerners, especially the ends, have been given special drills on rushing the Columbia star.

Bears Bid for 12th Triumph Here Tonight

Leading Hockey Team Meets D. C. Lions in 8:30 Match at Uline's

Coach Ralph (Cooney) Weiland's Eastern Division leading Hershey Bears will bring a great record into play at Uline Arena tonight when they oppose Washington's Lions in an American Hockey League match at 8:30 o'clock.

The Bears will bid for their twelfth verdict in their last 13 starts against the Green Shirts.

Hershey won nine matches while losing but one to Washington last season, and has swept two matches from the Lions this year. The two teams are to shift to Hershey, Pa. tomorrow night for a return game.

The big Bears only recently terminated an undefeated streak which extended to 16 consecutive matches, and boast two of the American League's scoring leaders in Wally Kilrea, veteran center, and Harry Frost a right winger.

Latest statistics show that Kilrea is leading the league's individual scorers with 43 points, while Frost is tied with Providence's Ab DeMarco for most goals scored with 17.

Numbered among the best bets of the visitors tonight will be Peggy O'Neil, veteran center traded by Washington to Hershey in exchange for Winger Bob Gracie several weeks ago, and Frank Ceryance, big goal tender who played on loan with the Lions when Net Minder Paul Gauthier was inactive with an injured right leg.

Ceryance replaced Hershey's Nick Damore in the nets over last weekend, and probably will stay on the job against his old Washington mates tonight.

Ceryance turned in a 3-0 shutout of the Providence Reds in his last match with the Lions. Oddly enough he scored a 4-3 victory over Washington last November 18 while making his American League debut for Hershey.

O'Neil, a smart playmaker and timely scorer, has fitted in smoothly with Hershey's powerhouse offensive while the fast skating and versatile Gracie also has delivered up to expectations with the Lions.

Tony Graboski, veteran Lion defenseman who again turned his lame ankle against Providence last Sunday night, will be back on the firing line tonight, and will be alternated along with "Iron Man" Frank Mailley and Ralph ("Scotty") Bowman.

Rosslyn Pair Upsets Rivals; Haight Stars

The mixed doubles team of Lucy Rose and Billy Stalcup, bowling for Rosslyn on the home drives last night upset Clarendon's aces, Madge Lewis and Al Wright, 1227 to 1146. Mrs. Rose paced the quartette with a sparkling 620 set. Stalcup, her partner, rolled 607, while Mrs. Lewis and Wright rolled 571 and 575, respectively.

In an alleged feature of the evening Walter (Pudge) Haight of The Washington Post teamed with Vic Carroll of the Redskins to get the heck beat out of 'em by Russ Hodges (WOL) and Bob Masterson, another Redskin.

The record shattering scores were: Haight-Carroll, 528; Hodges-Masterson, 588. A rubber bowling ball and other incidentals might have had something to do with the unusual high scores rolled by these immortals.

Manager Galt Davis presented appropriate prizes to all concerned.

Team Pin Records

Ed Wolfe, Mayo's Esso Service, topped the Commercial pin loop at Greenway Bowl last evening with his 157 single and 385 set to help win the odd tilt from F. L. Watkins. Two new team records were written into the league history when Carlin Creamery rolled a 633 game and 1829 set to take three from the Yankees. B. C. Mills helped in the record totals with a 144 game and 378 set. Buddy Sims' 121-358 helped Kohler's Pioneers to a sweep over Anacostia Lock and Bill Mullineaux's 131-355 enabled Kavakos Grill to whitewash Food Fair.

Oregon State Takes Sixth On Road, 33-29

By the Associated Press

East Lansing, Mich., Dec. 29.—Oregon State's barnstorming cagers staved off a last-half rally by Michigan State College to triumph, 33-29, and take their sixth straight victory before 2300 fans at Jenison Field House tonight. The Beavers led at the half, 23-14.

It was the second defeat in as many starts for the Spartans, who made their bid when the second half was five minutes old. They sliced the Beavers' lead to 29 to 25 with 10 minutes left to go, but Don Durdan, sharp shooting guard, put out the fire with four quick Oregon State points.

Durdan, a southpaw with an unerring hook-shot, paced both teams with 14 points on six baskets and two free throws. Michigan State's points were more evenly distributed, and Center Fred Stone's eight markers on three baskets and a pair of gift shots were high.

The Spartans held a brief lead in the opening minutes of play on a pair of free throws by Forward Ollie White, but the rangy Beavers soon loosed a heavy barrage and held at least an 8-point margin most of the first half.

stalled. Families were moved to the third floor so they could be evacuated through a skylight if the structure was filled with tear gas. The street was cleared.

At the zero hour the spotlights limned the building. A voice boomed through the amplifier in the stillness of the night:

"Come out through the front door. Come out backward and with your hands up, Banghart, you come out first."

The sound echoed eerily. It roused residents of a square block.

For ten minutes the agents fingered the triggers of their weapons.

The door of the Touhy apartment opened. Banghart, hands overhead, backed out cautiously. Strong arms collared him, hauled him into the agents' apartment, clapped manacles on his wrists.

Then came Touhy, the leader. He was clad in brilliant red pajamas. His dark, curly hair had been turned blond by peroxide.

Darlak emerged meekly.

All surrendered without a struggle. All seemed relieved that they were caught unscathed.

The trio did not know of the fate that befell two of their fellow fugitives. The reason was the utter secrecy with which the Government concealed its movements.

Into a similar trap at 11:15 o'clock last night walked Eugene Lanthorn, better known by the alias, James O'Connor, and St. Clair McInerney. They entered the Norwood Apartments at 1256 Leland Avenue, a few blocks from the Touhy hideout. The Federal men ordered them to surrender. They responded with gunfire. They were killed.

Hoover disclosed later that the two raids ended a Nation-wide search for the seven felons who fled from the Stateville Prison October 9. He reported that Mathew Nelson (correct name Martilick Nelson, alias Harold Seeger) had been taken into custody December 16, in Mineapolis. He added that William Stewart had been apprehended December 19 in Chicago.

Nelson Gives No Trouble

Nelson decided to be a good boy when Minneapolis City Detective Ed Ryan and agents of the FBI entered his room at the Hennepin Hotel in Minneapolis at 3:30 p. m., December 16.

A spokesman for the FBI in St. Paul said Nelson had been located in Minneapolis and officers sent to his room found him lying on a bed when his door was forced. He reached for a gun under his pillow, then thought better of it and surrendered without a struggle.

Hoover related that the gang's hideout yielded five revolvers, two sawed-off shotguns, and one 30-30-caliber rifle, and that $13,533 had been recovered.

Stolen Currency Recovered

Capt. Daniel Gilbert of the State's attorney's police announced later that the numbers on $10 bills found in Touhy's possession bore the same sequence as those snatched in the spectacular $20,000 holdup of an armored truck December 18 at the gates of a war plant in the west suburban area.

"The robbery had all the signs of a Touhy job," Gilbert said. "I was quite certain all along that the Touhy mob came out of hiding to get a stake."

The first steps in disposition of the gangsters were left to United States Attorney J. Albert Woll. The Federal men seized the fugitives, Hoover pointed out with a smile, on a charge of failure to notify their draft boards of a change of address when they went over the walls of the prison.

All, of course, can be returned to the Stateville Penitentiary, where they were serving long terms. Touhy and Banghart were sentenced to 99 years each for the 1933 kidnaping of John (Jake the Barber) Factor.

The others, with one exception, were imprisoned for robbery or as habitual criminals. The exception is Darlak, who was sent up for 199 years for murdering a Chicago policeman.

Hoover told reporters the seven desperadoes were trapped after weeks of careful planning and timing. He added they had been in Chicago since they fled from prison and provided this partial log of their movements.

Nelson Tells of Prison Break

They lived in a North Side flat until December 5. They moved then because Nelson went out on a drinking spree. As punishment, Nelson and Stewart were beaten with pistol butts by their confederates. Nelson went to Minneapolis and Stewart shifted to a Chicago hotel. Both were taken into custody later.

The other five transferred to the Norwood Apartments and last Sunday the apartment on Kenmore Avenue was rented. The traps were set.

In St. Paul, an FBI spokesman said Nelson gave this description of the prison break and subsequent events:

He did not know of the plan until early the morning of October 9, when Edward Darlak, his cellmate, and his pal, William Stewart, both gang members, told him. He was told to be at the "wall" at 1:30 p. m. The signal for the break came when Touhy, assisting the prison yard truck driver, slugged him.

Others exercising in the yard rushed the guards and disarmed them, using the guards as shields, fled to a tower and scaled the wall.

Nelson said he and the others spent the first night in woods near the prison. He claimed he left them the next morning and went to Chicago by streetcar. He had about $200, which had been smuggled into the prison to him, and he bought a revolver. When his money began to run out he held up an A. & P. grocery store in Chicago, took the draft card and other credentials of one of the employes, Harold Seeger, and used the man's name thereafter.

On December 12, he came to Minneapolis by bus. He wanted to see his mother, who lives near Minneapolis, and bought her a radio as a Christmas present, but he never got to see her for fear that police might be watching her house. How he was discovered here was not disclosed.

Hoover said his men would "run down anyone who aided the gang since the Stateville break."

FBI Uses "Best Talent"

The FBI chief stated that the "best talent" in his service took part in the roundup, and lauded the cooperation of the Chicago Police Department.

Leading in the hunt, in addition to Hoover, were assistant FBI Directors C. A. Tolson, E. J. Connelley and Richard Glabin; Inspector Myron Gurnea, Spencer Drayton, special agent in charge of the Chicago office; S. K. McKee, special agent in charge of the Washington, D. C., office, and W. G. Bannister, special agent in charge of the Oklahoma office.

Hoover recalled that some of the gangsters had been paroled in past phases of their criminal careers.

"I think it stinks," he asserted.

He spoke approval of paroles "decently administered" but condemned the practice of "turning rats like these loose on the streets to indulge in gunplay against innocent citizens."

Hoover reported the Chicago raids brought to 24 the number of persons killed by the FBI in the last ten years. In that time, he added, 55,000 persons had been captured and only 13 agents had been lost in gun fights.

Teen-Age Registration Ends Tomorrow

chances of being drafted within the next few months is slight. Those with children will not be called "for quite a long time" unless present quotas are increased and the supply of single men is absorbed more rapidly than expected.

Applicants for enlistment in the Marine Corps, Navy and Coast Guard have reached the 250 mark at District Selective Service headquarters, but December quotas for these services were filled shortly after the announcement of this manner of procedure, so few applicants have been sent on to the naval services.

The present plan for recruiting is a stop-gap measure to bridge the lag between the President's action halting recruiting of draft eligibles by the three naval arms, and is expected to be supplanted by a new plan by February 1.

Volunteering Permitted

In clarifying the War Manpower Commission's order ending general enlistments, a War Department spokesman yesterday said there was nothing to prevent a man subject to selective service from volunteering for immediate induction in the Army.

The statement came in response to queries on how two residents of Washington, Felix and Charles Hapsburg, sons of the late Emperor Karl of Austria, were able to volunteer for service, in view of the WMC order.

The War Department said that anyone registered and eligible for induction could volunteer for immediate service, subject to approval by his local draft board, even though his number had not been reached.

College students, meanwhile, have been up in the air over whether to return to school after the Christmas holidays, but Consultant Brown has termed a return to school the wisest plan regardless of whether they belonged to enlisted reserves or were subject only to draft board call.

Colleges to Be Selected

Concurrently, the War Manpower Commission announced that meetings are being held by a new educational committee to consider selection of an estimated 350 colleges and universities to be used in the specialized training program recently announced by the Army and Navy.

Brown pointed out that Manpower Chief McNutt recently estimated more than 150,000 medical, dental, veterinary, engineering and other special science students would be kept in school through a new temporary draft-deferment order.

The enlisted reserve system, he said, takes many months to set up, "and it would not be surprising if many of the reserves are not called for many months."

Men Over 38 Released

As for the men in the Army over 38, the machinery for returning them to production on the home front already is functioning, despite the fact that the order for their release is less than a month old.

They are receiving honorable discharge; they are handicapped by advanced age, 38 or over, to such an extent that usefulness to the Army is secondary to that of industry; they present satisfactory evidence they will be employed in essential war industry, including agriculture, if discharged from the Army.

Not Right of Individual

It was emphasized that no soldier would be discharged unless a suitable trained replacement is available and that the discharge of any 38-year-old would be granted only to further the war effort and not as a right of the individual.

Since the returning of a 38-year-old to civilian life is at the discretion of his commanding officer, a good deal of responsibility will devolve upon the officers in determining whether or not a man should be discharged.

Flour Price Raised, Bread Control Next

White bread must contain not less than three parts nor more than four parts milk solids to 100 parts flour, and must contain not more than two parts shortening and not more than four parts sugar or other related fermentable carbohydrate solids.

Consignment selling of bread—a widespread practice which permits bakers to accept returns of unused bread—will be stopped.

Special provision is made for the continued manufacture of bread used for religious ritual purposes.

The price of bread under price ceilings will remain unchanged, but the price of such goods as crackers, pastry, cake, cookies, spaghetti and noodles, which are not affected by the simplification order, probably will be increased "somewhat," an OPA spokesman said.

New price ceilings for flour—approximately 40 to 75 cents a 196-pound barrel above present prices—will put the wholesale price of family-type flour in the District at $9.20 a barrel, with proportionate increases at retail.

Permits Higher Wheat Prices

The price adjustment was ordered by OPA with the approval of the Department of Agriculture and Economic Stabilization Director James F. Byrnes, to allow for higher wheat prices without recourse to subsidy, OPA said.

Flour, which was previously under a temporary blanket ceiling, will be placed under specific dollars-and-cents prices as of January 4, when the price order goes into effect.

The price was designed to yield farmers at least 100 per cent of parity for wheat, based on OPA computations. To achieve this level, OPA included both conservation and parity payments to farmers, as well as their sale price, even though some representatives of the farm bloc have protested this procedure as a distortion of the parity formula.

The specific prices were placed at the processor level, with specified markups provided for wholesalers, jobbers and retailers, passing on the increase to the ultimate consumer who buys his own flour.

To Aid Flour Distribution

OPA said that the price increase would serve to relieve a bad distribution situation which has resulted recently in millers refraining from marketing their flour because of the unfavorable price picture.

The fixed prices will guarantee wheat growers at least 89 per cent of parity for their wheat, with the additional 11 per cent required by law being made up by the amount of conservation and parity payments to farmers.

Rationing Awaits 15 New OPA Forms

coupons to be used later in meat rationing. Printing of these books is practically completed.

Other forms whose need will be immediate are:

Program regulations, the official regulations of OPA to guide consumers and retailers through the machinery of canned good rationing.

Information pamphlet, one of which will be issued to each family, explaining the details of the program and its necessity. At least 60 million of these will have to be printed before rationing starts.

Application form for industries and institutions, such as hotels, restaurants, factory cafeterias, and the like.

Certificates to be issued industries and institutions to be used for purchasing goods as the housewife will use her point coupons.

Instructions to registrars, acquainting volunteers and other personnel of local boards who will register applicants for ration books with details of the program.

Consumer declaration forms on which the applicant will list rationable goods already on hand. A first printing of 60 million of these—one for each family—also will be required.

Point schedules on cards to be displayed in retail stores informing consumers of the current point value of each artiele available for sale. These schedules will be changed as point values of merchandise are changed on the basis of supplies available.

The forms for use of retailers, distributors and processors in their own dealings will not be needed to institute the rationing program. Time for beginning the program, therefore, does not depend upon their completion.

Early announcement of the plan to ration canned goods did not result in heavy runs on retailers' stocks, an OPA spokesman said yesterday, nor is there evidence of widespread hoarding. This statement agreed with reports from retail stores previously made.

Citizen's Arrival At Scene of Touhy Trap Ill-Timed

Chicago, Dec. 29 (AP).—Just as whispering, tip-toeing Federal agents were about to spring their trap on Roger Touhy and his aides early today a citizen staggered up to the sidewalk in front of the surrounded building.

Officers tried to restrain him, but the interloper, full of whisky and wrath, declaimed: "I'll get your jobs if you don't let me go."

One policeman clapped a large hand over the citizen's mouth. Another picked him up bodily. He was hauled away to a police station.

said Mr. Roosevelt, is complicated by the fact that French armies use a different caliber gun from the American and British forces. This problem can be met in part by supplying new weapons to the revitalized French fighting groups, he added.

Sees Giraud Envoys

Although the President denied London dispatches that de Gaulle postponed his trip here at a specific request from the White House, he did admit that the American trip of the Fighting French leader twice has been postponed. But despite these postponements, he said, he still expects de Gaulle here very soon.

That statement did not discount the generally accepted belief here that Mr. Roosevelt prefers not to confer with De Gaulle until De Gaulle has flown to North Africa and worked out a modus vivendi with Giraud, new high commissioner for French North Africa.

Prior to Mr. Roosevelt's statement, Gen. M. E. Bethouart and J. L. du Breuil, members of a mission from Giraud, had conferred with the President and in a statement in the White House lobby virtually invited De Gaulle to make common cause with the new North African high commissioner.

Unity Motive Stressed

General Bethouart declared that everything should be subordinated to unity in the effort to smash Germany and liberate France—an indirect way of suggesting that differences both of precedence and personality between De Gaulle and Giraud should be unified to force an effective French fighting force.

The White House statement of the two representatives from North Africa left the impression, apparently carefully calculated, that Mr. Roosevelt was placing his influence behind Giraud in the hope that De Gaulle would lead Fighting French forces into organic union with the forces already constituted into an effective unit in North Africa.

Speaking through an impromptu interpreter, General Bethouart voiced a direct appeal for unity.

"We have only one idea," he said, "which is to unify ourselves into reconquering our country. Everything ought to be subordinated to the task of conquering Germany and General Giraud has that idea as well as General De Gaulle."

He was asked for his reaction to De Gaulle's proposal for organization of a provisional government in North Africa.

"Everything that would favor French unity would always be received with pleasure," the general replied, but further than that he would not go.

He said that Mr. Roosevelt had "received us very kindly," adding that obviously "I cannot say anything about the nature of the discussion."

from the enclosure and helped him to escape by hiding him in the back seat of her car. Provost Marshal Capt. Henry F. Tyson immediately notified the FBI which issued a complaint for her arrest.

A. P. Kitchin, special agent in charge of the FBI here, said he did not know the nature of the narcotics charge against Bryan. The FBI did not disclose the whereabouts of the couple during the 24-hour interim between the time of the escape and the subsequent arrest.

Federal and Army authorities said they did not know how long Miss Parrott and Bryan had been friends. Bryan was said to have joined the Army last summer at Los Angeles. An unidentified Army officer said he understood that the soldier previously had been a member of a nationally famous dance band.

Miss Parrott was released under her own recognizance pending a preliminary hearing before the United States Commissioner here tomorrow morning.

When newsmen approached the writer for a statement in the United States marshal's office, where she was fingerprinted, she replied curtly:

"No statement, no statement whatever."

Miss Parrott's first book, "Ex-Wife," published in 1929, after a divorce from her first husband, Lindsay Parrott, New York newspaperman, was a best-seller, 100,000 copies having been sold.

Subsequently, she wrote other novels, including "Gentleman's Fate," "Love Goes Past," "Strangers May Kiss," "The Tumult and the Shouting," "Road Leading Somewhere," and "Rim of the World."

Miley Slaying Figure's Execution Stayed

Frankfort, Ky., Dec. 29 (INS).—Robert Anderson, one of the trio sentenced to die for the murders of Marion Miley, golf star, and her mother, Mrs. Elgo Miley, tonight was given a reprieve by order of Gov. Keen Johnson.

The reprieve came on the heels of an announcement that another of the trio, Tom Penney, had purportedly signed a confession in which he absolved Anderson of any part in the crimes. Anderson was to have gone to the electric chair January 1.

Allies Quit Key Hill on Road to Tunis

Widespread aerial activity was resumed over Tunisia with Allied bombers and fighters raining explosives on Axis rear line bases, including Sousse and Tunis, and strafing enemy communication lines. Axis aerial losses yesterday were listed as six or seven, including three bombers, against two Allied fighters.

At sea the British Admiralty said its submarines had sunk at least two more Axis supply ships and probably damaged two more off the eastern Tunisian coast, and along the Italian coast near Naples.

In Libya, General Montgomery's British Eighth Army still was pushing westward, less than 180 miles from Tripoli, and the R. A. F. Middle Eastern command continued to range ahead into Tunisia, its blows overlapping those of Allied airmen based on the west.

Tunis, the capital, and nearby La Goulett at the harbor entrance, were hit Sunday night, and fires started near a railroad yard, a Cairo communique said.

While the Allies announced the abandonment of the hilltop northeast of Medjez-El-Bab, won after heavy fighting Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, the Germans announced its recapture.

Most of the ground fighting, however, was in central and southern Tunisia, but the Allied communique said "our forces destroyed two enemy tanks with artillery fire, and light enemy units attacked one of our positions north of Medjez-El-Bab without success."

In the aerial war, a formation of P-38 Lockheed Lightning Fighters made their deepest penetration yet of enemy territory in the raid on the Axis truck convoy, "carrying troops, gasoline and supplies near the border of Tunisia and Tripolitania."

"About 20 trucks were destroyed," the communique said, "most of them being left on fire."

12 Other Vehicles Destroyed

This news appeared to bear out earlier reports that the Axis forces in Libya were moving westward into Tunisia to make a final stand there in the battle for Africa. The convoy was pounced upon between Tripoli and Medenine, 50 miles southeast of the port of Gabes, the latter being the apparent goal of the United States ground troops that Berlin said had entered Gafsa.

Twelve other Axis vehicles were announced destroyed by Lightnings and P-40 Curtiss fighters in several sweeps, one of them in the Pont-du-Fahs sector where French troops were fighting. One Allied fighter was missing.

In the same area British Spitfires attacked six Junkers and a number of Messerschmitt fighters escorting them, shooting down two of the bombers and one Messerschmitt at the cost of one British plane.

The Flying Fortress raid on the docks and harbor of Sousse was made without loss, and the communique said "Hits were seen on the docks and much smoke was observed after the attack."

Two or three enemy fighters attempting to attack an Allied airfield were shot down and an enemy bomber also was destroyed by P-38 fighters, the communique said.

The text of the communique, issued in Washington, follows:

"North Africa:

"1. Our patrols in the northern area were in contact with the enemy during the night of December 27-28. At the same time, bombers attacked behind the enemy's lines. Both sides yesterday briefly shelled the other's positions. Our forces destroyed two enemy tanks with artillery fire. Light enemy units attacked one of our positions north of Medjez-El-Bab without success.

"2. During air patrols over forward areas yesterday, one squadron of Spitfires which encountered an enemy formation of six JU-88's escorted by six ME-109's shot down two JU-88's and one ME-109. One of our fighters was lost.

"3. Our P-38 and P-40 fighters on sweeps made several attacks on enemy vehicles and destroyed at least 12 of them. One of our fighters is missing A formation of P-38's on a sweep southward attacked enemy trucks, carrying troops, gasoline and supplies near the border of Tunisia and Tripolitania. About 20 trucks were destroyed, most of them being left on fire.

"4. Two or three enemy fighters attempting to attack one of our airfields were shot down and an enemy bomber also was destroyed, all by P-38's.

"5. The docks and harbor at Sousse were attacked by Flying Fortresses yesterday without loss Hits were seen on the docks and much smoke was observed after the attack.

"6. After inflicting severe casualties on the enemy, our units have now been withdrawn from the hill position 6 miles northeast of Medjez-el-Bab, which was the scene of heavy fighting Christmas Eve and Christmas Day."

tion bombs on the airdrome area, starting large fires.

Medium bombers pounded the runway on the airfield at Gasmata, in New Britain and Consolidated B-24s started fires in the dispersal areas at the Lae airdrome above Buna in New Guinea. Smaller Allied planes were active throughout the day. Douglas A-20s bombed and strafed Japanese occupied huts and canoes near the mouths of rivers on the New Guinea coast to the northwest of Buna.

B. & L. League Votes to Cancel Annual Fete

Members of the District of Columbia Building and Loan League, meeting yesterday at the Raleigh Hotel, voted unanimously to cancel the annual banquet scheduled for mid-January.

Martin A. Cook, chairman of the banquet committee, stated that in all probability building and loan affairs of this nature will be out for the duration. Cook said that while it was an event that 600 members and their friends anticipated each year, it was in line with a movement to eliminate all frills and banqueting in wartime.

One of the largest gatherings of the year assembled for the final session of the league. Reports were also heard from Edward L. McAleer, chairman of the advertising committee and C. Clinton James, chairman fo the legislative committee.

Among the distinguished guests present were Megrew Brock, president of the Gem City Association of Dayton, Ohio, and second vice president of the United States Savings and Loan League; Horace Russell, general counsel of the national body from Chicago, and Morton Bodfish, also from Chicago.

U. S. Court Voids Mining Leases on Tribe Reservation

Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 29 (AP).—Federal Judge Knight today declared "null and void" a New York State law adopted in 1909 under which the National Gypsum Co. obtained mining leases on the Tonowanda Indian Reservation.

He held that the United States Government, suing on behalf of the Tonowanda Indians, was entitled to summary judgment.

Under authority of Section 8 of the Indian law of New York State, the gypsum leases were issued for a 20-year period on April 26, 1922, but were extended in 1936 for an additional 14 years beginning May 1, 1942.

As part of the confirmation of the treaty under which the Tonawandas acquired the reservation land, Judge Knight pointed out that in 1857 the title was conveyed to the State comptroller "in trust" only.

The court stated that another lease could be arranged by the gypsum company through the Federal Government.

Expected Rise In Flour Prices Boosts Wheat

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Dec. 29.—All deliveries of wheat rose to new high levels for the season today and closed virtually at the peaks. Corn advanced sharply in sympathy with wheat and most other grains finished with net gains for the session.

Wheat closed 1 to 1¾ cents higher than Monday's finish, May, $1.37¾-⅞; July, $1.37¾; corn was ⅞ to 1¼ cents up, May, 95⅝-¾; July, 95½-⅝; oats, ⅛ to ⅜ higher; rye, unchanged to ¼ up and soybeans gained ¾ cents.

Although official confirmation was lacking, a report that sharply higher flour ceiling prices were soon to be announced by James Byrnes, economic stabilization director, imparted early strength to the market and wheat opened as much as ¾ cent higher.

A report suggested that the flour ceiling would be boosted 75 cents to a dollar, instead of the previously mentioned increase of 58 cents. Some traders said the report was merely a guess and were slow to follow the advance.

Trade circles expected the official announcement of the new flour ceiling would be made this week and if the early reports were true, the base price of wheat in Chicabo and Minneapolis would be $1.42½ to $1.45 a bushel, depending on whether the June or November parity price were used as a base for computation. Such a figure, it was said, would be acceptable to most mills and to many farmers as it would be well above the loan level.

Ceiling Is Raised On Butter Futures

Chicago, Dec. 29 (AP).—The Chicago Mercantile Exchange today announced the establishment of a new maximum trading price of 45.50 cents for December and January storage standard butter futures, effective tomorrow.

These futures, in which trading is restricted to liquidation of outstanding commitments, have been limited by ceilings of 44.55 and 44.60 cents, respectively, since early last October, when dairy products were brought under Government price control for the first time.

The exchange's action will bring the maximum of the contracts up to the base quotation established for Chicago 90 score butter by the Office of Price Administration's permanent price order issued Christmas Eve, which also becomes effective tomorrow. Chicago wholesale market quotations for butter fixed by the new regulations range from 44 cents for 88 score butter to 46 for 92 score.

Sarnoff said the unfication of the administrative, research and manufacturing activities would result in "closer coordination and increased flexibility of operation."

George K. Throckmorton, former chairman of the executive committee of R. C. A. Manufacturing Co., was electe1 a vice president of Radio Corp. of America.

Two New Directors Added to T.W.A. Board

Kansas City, Dec. 29 (AP).—Two new members were elected to the board of directors of the Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., today.

They are V. P. Conroy, vice president in charge of traffic, and John A. Collings, vice president in charge of operations.

One vacancy on the board was created by the call to active duty of Paul E. Richter, executive vice president. The other directorate had been held by Harold Warner, New York attorney.

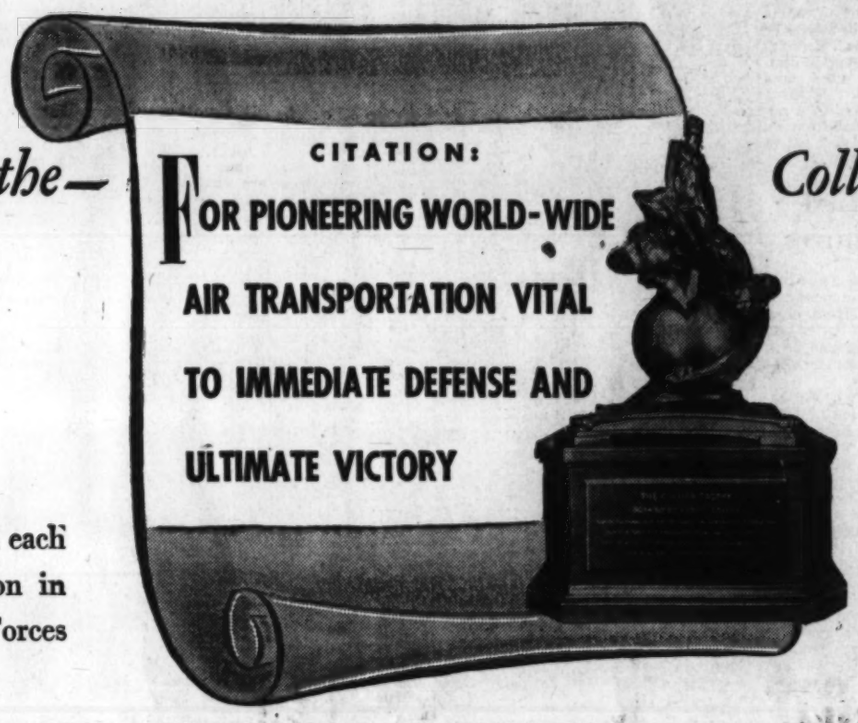
TO THE ARMY AIR FORCES AND THE AIRLINES OF THE UNITED STATES

Co-winners of the—



Collier Trophy

This week the Collier Trophy, awarded each year for the greatest achievement in aviation in America, was made jointly to the Army Air Forces and the Airlines of the United States.

It was presented by Vice-President Wallace, and reflects the appreciation of our allied nations for the work these two organizations did during the dark days of 1941, in supplying aircraft to strategic battlefronts.

This award takes on special significance at this time, because it brings to light the vision and foresight of the Congress of the United States and the Government in adopting years ago a long-range program to foster, develop and encourage civil aviation.

Such a program, under which the Airlines of the United States were developed to a degree of usefulness and efficiency unsurpassed anywhere else in the world, enabled them to be ready to help the Army solve one of the most difficult problems of the whole war.

Later, history may tell us that this service, webbing across continents and oceans, laid the foundation on which our ultimate victory was achieved.

The award takes note of the difficulties, hazards and hardships which surrounded the ferrying of bombers, men, munitions and materiel to the war fronts during a crisis in which every hour counted.

These air fleets brought life and hope over incredible distances. Inaccessible outposts, weakened by terrific onslaught, were made strong.

Since then, the Army Air Forces through the Air Transport Command, have extended into a world-wide service, flying planes, supplies, personnel and mail to the four corners of the earth . . . blazing new skyways in an effort to answer the critical problem of time and space.

In all of these activities the Airlines of the nation are grateful for the services which they have been able to contribute. They furnished the nucleus of the world's greatest pool of experienced pilots . . . all ready, able and willing to serve their country in any part of the globe. They are training mechanics, repairing and modifying aircraft, performing special missions.

Eastern Air Lines, together with all the other Airlines, is proud to have played a part in building this global system of air transportation and are pleased that this trophy was given jointly to the Army Air Forces and the Airlines . . . because the job could be done only by each organization working closely with the other.

In accepting these joint honors with the Army Air Forces and other Airlines, Eastern is gratified that although many of its Silverliners were converted into Cargoliners to operate in this important service of Logistics, we have been able to continue regular schedules on our routes.

In this way essential transportation is being furnished on the home front to people engaged in war production—and for the rapid movement of materiel from the war production centers of the nation direct to the fighting fronts.

While we pause on the occasion of this award, to write a brief chapter in the history of the airplane in this global war, we would be woefully amiss if we failed to realize and appreciate that none of this would have been possible were it not for the loyalty, skill and determination in the hearts and souls of the men and women who build our planes—and our men who fly them!

For herein lies the reason why our planes are so superior in performance, safety and reliability . . . and why our service in both Tactics and Logistics is being so excellently performed.

Eddie Rickenbacker

It's "Hats Off" to those who build and service the planes, and Cheers for those who fly them! To keep these vital services going let's all buy more War Bonds!

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Reorganizations Should Be Made Easier

How Federal workers can be fired, transferred, or reassigned to other jobs in the service are some of the annoying problems of Government that are bound by bundles of red tape and general misunderstanding.

Simple and concise rules to cover each of these situations must be had. But the departments and agencies solve the problem by putting the regulations on paper. They must see to it that all the employes are aware of the rules and how they operate.

If this were done it would help stop the waste of manpower in the Federal service and our Government would be vastly improved.

Incompetents are holding jobs in Government today because their superiors don't know how to get rid of them. Employes are idle and have very little to do because no one seems to know how—or doesn't bother—to get them transferred to overburdened offices. People are working below their skills because their superiors don't know how to get them reassigned to jobs where they can be of a greater benefit to Uncle Sam.

The opinion is almost universal that no one ever gets fired in Government. And the records of Government tend to prove that general belief. Very few people do get fired. New officials are brought into Government every day with that belief and they don't know what to do about it even if they wanted to fire someone for incompetence. And the personnel directors don't tell them how it can be done.

I asked 25 officials recently if they knew how to go about firing an incompetent employe. Only one said he knew how. "One of the hardest jobs I've had since I've been in Washington," he explained, "was getting an employe fired. It took hours and hours of my time but I was determined in this particular case."

Another official said he had discovered the best way to get rid of people was to reorganize the office and abolish jobs in the process. He says it's the best way to get around all the red tape. One of the top personnel officers in Government insisted that even the most incompetent employe couldn't be fired if that employe had been certified by the Civil Service Commission. He's wrong, of course.

An interesting view was expressed by another official who believes that the policy of firing or getting tough generally is fixed unwittingly by the President and the department heads. "If you have a firm department head who demands and gets results," he observed, "the bureau chiefs and others down the line will take the cue and adopted a tough policy. But if you have a soft and easy person at the top the same conditions are bound to exist throughout the agency."

"I'm convinced," he said, "that if the President would fire some of the people around him who have failed in their jobs there would be a tightening up throughout the Government overnight."

Employes Surveyed

I've also conducted a survey among employes who have told me they have little or nothing to do or that their highest skills weren't being utilized. Invariably, they are in one of the following groups:

1. The office was extremely busy at one time and may be again. A staff is built up to take care of the maximum load. When the work falls off the employes while away valuable time. The War Transfer Unit recently investigated a case of this kind. The employes had complained over idleness. The chief admitted he didn't have enough work to keep his people busy and he tried to explain it away by saying that eventually he may get another big job and he wanted to be prepared for it. If the Government had simple, workable transfer and reassignment systems these employes could have been transferred to busy spots during lull periods. The chief thought he was playing safe by hoarding and wasting manpower.

2. Hundreds of new people—and many veterans, too—in key jobs don't understand the rules governing separations, transfers, and reassignments. These people are wrapped up in doing a job. They ask for help and if the employes sent by the personnel office don't work out more employes are detailed to the offices. The employes who flopped oftentimes are given jobs at which they must make work to keep busy. A number of employes in this group have told me that they could have performed the work satisfactorily if they had been given a little training or a little time had been taken to explain it to them.

3. Members of minority races have told me that a common device used to froce them to resign or to request transfer is for their superiors to ignore them completely. They get little or no work, or work below their skills, and they get out for the sake of their own self-respect.

4. Say what you want, but our Government is filled with jealous and ambitious people who grab everything that's not nailed down in the hope of increasing their prestige and, incidentally, their own salaries. The more employes they have under them, they figure, the greater their salaries and most of the time they're right under the method used by the Civil Service Commission in classifying jobs.

Employes to Blame

Employes themselves are frequently to blame because they are working at jobs below their highest skills. These employes keep mum about their talents and they can't expect their bosses to read their minds. They are at fault, too, for accepting the first job that comes along.

On the other hand, the employes do expect the personnel office to study the long and involved questionnaires they must fill out every few months and on which is told their life histories. Why take all the time and trouble on the questionnaires if they're to be forgotten?

Moreover, people qualified to do professional work are kept in their clerical jobs because they don't have college degrees. Stenographers do clerical and typing work because it's one sure way of getting the work done.

For months the Civil Service Commission has been crying about a shortage of lens grinders, but yesterday a lens grinder by profession told me he quit the Washington Navy Yard because they would not transfer him to that work. The grinder had sought the transfer for four months before he got disgusted and quit.

The Civil Service Commission has complete jurisdiction over transfers. It has had the authority for some months. Many thousands have been transferred and many more thousands would have been if (1) the commission had received the wholehearted cooperation of all the agencies, and (2) everyone had a clearer understanding of what it was all about.

President Roosevelt has asked for a reduction in personnel and elimination of red tape and useless activities in the Federal service. One of the quickest ways of bringing this about is to simplify the everyday rules and regulations surrounding the lives of Federal workers. By unwinding the red tape, the entire service could be made more flexible and efficient.

(Editor's note: This is the second of a series on how the Government service can be improved. Another article will appear here soon.)

Turn About

Marlin, Texas.—Jack Brothers, who heads Marlin's sugar rationing board, was sorry he had to turn down his old friend, Brown Bratton. Bratton needed extra sugar for his soda fountain.

Now Brothers knows he won't have much luck getting extra gasoline. Bratton is head of the gas rationing board.

Nightmarish Quandary

Staunton, Va.—Allen Caldwell knelt behind his car and fumbled with a jack. Other motorists passing in the darkness offered nothing more than unspoken sympathy.

Finally a taxi driver stopped. He found Caldwell trapped fast, his thumb caught between the jack and car bumper, and extricated him.

War Stamp Drive To Be Mapped Today

Plans for the local "War Savings Stamp Album Clearance" drive, which will be conducted during January, will be made at a meeting in the Carlton Hotel, Sixteenth and K Streets Northwest, today at 3 p. m.

The campaign is designed to induce holders of partly-filled albums, which the Treasury Department estimates as totaling 100 million throughout the country, to complete them for conversion into war bonds. In the District, the drive is headed by H. L. Rust, jr., chairman of the War Savings Committee.

City News In Brief

Holding his hand in his pocket as if it contained a gun, a Negro man yesterday held up Mrs. Harriett Yancey, 42, 1007 K Street Southeast, manager of a High ice cream store in the 1200 block Fourth Street Southwest, yesterday and escaped with $6.

He entered the store and asked for a cup of ice cream and when the woman turned to get it, he threatened her and demanded the money.

Mrs. Yancey dodged behind the counter as the man grabbed a handful of silver from a cash drawer.

Allied Flag Indorsed

A new design for a United Nations flag was indorsed by the Danish Club of Washington at its Christmas party meeting as Old Country Yuletide songs were sung and traditional dances were danced about the Christmas tree.

The flag, designed by Holger C. Langmack, president of the club and physical education instructor at Paul Junior High, is his idea of how the four freedoms embodying the principles of the United Nations should be portrayed. John V. Hansen made the presentation of the flag to the club.

Library to Close

The Southwestern Branch of the Public Library, Seventh and H Streets, Southwest, will not be open on Sundays beginning January 3, due to the fuel shortage, Miss Clara W. Herbert, librarian, announced yesterday.

$1042 in Clothing Stolen

Clothing thefts totaling $1042 were reported to Washington police yesterday. Philipsborn & Co., reported the loss of ten garments, including eight furs, valued at $790.

William R. MacFadden, 424 Tenth Street Northeast, reported clothing valued at $200 taken from his parked automobile at Tenth and Maine Avenue.

Oliver C. Short Recalled to Post In Commerce Dept.

Due to the pressure of administrative duties in the Department of Commerce, Oliver C. Short has been recalled from his post with the Transfer Unit of the Civil Service Commission to serve again as Commerce Department Director of Personnel, it was announced yesterday.

Short was assigned to duty with the commission in March of this year to take charge of the transfer of Federal employes throughout the Government service to more important war work. Under his direction the commission has effected the transfer of approximately 5000 war transfers a month.

WPB Halts Work on Three FWA Projects

A smoldering feud between the War Production Board and the Federal Works Agency appears due to break out into the open any time now, following a WPB stop order Monday on three FWA projects involving the construction of 29 Recreation Department playgrounds and some bridle paths scheduled by the National Capital Parks office. These three are only part of a grand total of more than 100 FWA projects halted by WPB.

Federal Works Agency officials explained that they had not submitted two of the projects to WPB because they did not involve the use of any critical materials, and the third project had not even yet been approved by FWA. Officials questioned the authority of WPB to step in and forbid projects which had not been submitted.

War Production Board spokesman said that the projects were submitted by the Interior Department in accordance with a request made by Donald Nelson to six agencies last October to submit all their building plans for review.

The agencies were Federal Works Agency, Interior Department, War, Navy, Maritime Commission, Agriculture Department, Commerce and TVA.

In his letter, Nelson pointed out that too much material and manpower resources were being expended, and said public and private building must be diverted to channels directly contributing to the war effort.

It was in response to this letter, WPB said, that Interior submitted the recreation and park plans.

Pointing out that the three plans called for the expenditure of nearly one million dollars, WPB said that although the projects did not call for copper and steel and materials of that sort they represented the expenditure of nearly one million dollars in manpower.

Although some District officials were claiming yesterday that WPB was infringing upon the War Manpower Commission by discussing manpower, it is known that in areas where shortages exist, the Manpower Commissions calls upon WPB to stop allowing contracts which will use too much labor.

The District, WPB officials pointed out, is now faced with a labor shortage.

Equally serious, WPB spokesmen claimed, was the use of trucks, steam shovels, graders and even hand shovels. These are critical materials, WPB pointed out, which will wear out and have to be replaced.

A stop order was issued on FWA Project No. 138 involving $357,000 in construction of pedestrian and bridle trails in the National Parks here, and on Federal Works Project No. 131, involving $478,000 in construction on 20 playgrounds. And a stop order will be issued WPB said on FWA No. 131, a project for nine playgrounds which would have cost $235,000.

ODT Asks Shunning Of Furniture Marts

The Office of Defense Transportation yesterday requested other Government agencies not to send speakers or representatives to the Chicago and Grand Rapids furniture marts next month.

ODT said managers of the two marts refused to comply with a request that they be cancelled on the ground that their plans were too far advanced.

Eastman had requested cancellation of all furniture marts and sale shows on the ground they would stimulate travel and interfere with essential travel on heavily burdened public carriers.

WPB Seeks More Data On Hospitals

Survey Results in New Questionnaire; 'Fireworks' Due at Today's Meeting

By Mary Spargo
Post Staff Writer

After completing a bed-to-bed survey of all hospitals in the District and metropolitan area, the War Production Board issued a new questionnaire requesting "supplementary information" from those hospitals whose priority requests are under consideration, The Post learned last night.

Revelation of the questionnaire, WPB-2116, came as all forces were gathering for a thorough airing of the hospital situation here before the Senate District Committee today. There was every evidence last night that today's meeting, called by Chairman Pat McCarran, is to be a heated session.

Units to Be Represented

Expected to attend the meeting are representatives of the Federal Works Agency, whose hospital expansion plans are threatened with curtailment, representatives of the War Production Board, which is threatening the curtailment, a representative of the Office of Defense, Health and Welfare Services, of the Federal Security Agency, under which come the Lanham Act Funds, which would be used in any proposed construction, and superintendents of all hospitals in the Metropolitan area.

The questionnaire, upon which superintendents of hospitals affected refused comment for the record, presents 15 questions for hospital officials to answer. Issued by WPB December 17 and approved by the Budget Bureau and the United States Public Health Service, the questionnaire reached superintendents on Christmas Eve.

Wording of Questionnaire

The questionnaire began as follows:

"1. Give description of present hospital facilities.

(a) Number of nursing units (wards) and number of beds in each unit. Also describe type of service given in each unit, i. e., medical, surgical, obstetrics, pediatrics, contagion, neurophysciatrie sic), tuberculosis.

(b) Number of operating rooms, delivery rooms and emergency rooms.

"2. Give patient days, per cent occupancy, number of surgical procedures, and number of deliveries during 1940, 1941, and to date this year.

"3. Give same information as in 2 above for other hospitals in city or local trade area."

No. 3 Stopped Them

Question 3 had local superintendents stopped. They said that they had enough to do measuring every square foot of their own hospital without surveying another institution. Local men were returning the questionnaires to FWA with a request that officials there dig out that information for WPB.

Asked about the questions, Maury Maverick, director of the governmental division of WPB which is responsible for the blanks, denied that the questionnaire was was "still another survey." It was just a little more information that was needed, he said.

About question 3, Maverick hesitated, sent for a blank, looked over it, and then said probably superintendents here couldn't answer the question, but perhaps superintendents in rural areas would be able to respond to such a request. He said WPB, anxious to cooperate with local hospitals, wouldn't insist upon an answer to that one.

What Have You Done?

Question 4 is: "Have you added all possible beds in present hospital by:

a. Doubling up in all private rooms without going below approximately 65 to 75 square feet of floor area per bed.

b. Adding all posible additional beds in semiprivate rooms and wards.

c. Using solaria, waiting rooms or other unused areas for patient beds.

Question No. 4 was the one that had the hospital superintendents on their knees with the yardstick. Allowing 65 to 75 square feet floor area per bed means roughly a space 6 by 10, 8 by 8 or 7 by 10. Average hospital bed is a little less than 4 feet wide and about 7 feet long.

Hospital superintendents had to be careful about their measurements because the blank carried a line at the bottom pointing out that it is a criminal offense to make a willfully false statement to any Government department or agency on a matter within its jurisdiction.

Some Passed Buck

Questions 7 and 8 were others on which some of the superintendents passed the buck to FWA to answer for WPB.

The questions were:

"7. Give population increases in your normal trade area between January 1, 1940, and present.

"8. Give estimated population increases by end of 1943."

Maverick was inclined to think the local hospitals could skip those, too.

Question 14 was: "Give information on new facilities you are asking for, in accordance with 1a and b above."

Question 15 was: "Will you be able to secure enough graduate and/or student nurses and other types of personnel to make proper use of your added facilities?"

Present at today's meeting will be Maverick and Everett W. Jones for WPB; Baird Snyder, assistant administrator, and Henry J. Sullivan, assistant regional director in the District and the metropolitan area for FWA; Miss Lavina Engle, regional director of Region 4, Office of Defense, Health and Welfare Service of Federal Security Agency, and all hospital superintendents in the metropolitan area.

War Fund Makes Allocation Of $3,829,415 to 82 Agencies

Allocation of the $3,829,415.13 to member agencies of the Community War Fund took place yesterday at the board of trustees' annual budget meeting at the Chamber of Commerce Building.

The general policy followed in budgeting the War Fund moneys to the agencies, it was pointed out in the budget report, was to strengthen the 82 welfare organizations, rather than to attempt expansion of activity.

There is approximately $145,000 more available for appropriations to agencies for their services during the year ahead than was available at this time last year.

Reasons for this are the large reduction in Community Chest headquarters appropriation, because collection and campaign expenses are now absorbed by the Community War Fund, and the fact that three agencies are no longer members of the Chest.

The money raised represented 94.4 per cent of the goal sought.

Coleman Jennings, president of the Chest, praised volunteer workers, especially Negro leaders and teams which were integrated into the Metropolitan Unit of the campaign organization under the leadership of Dr. Dorothy B. Ferebee, unit vice chairman.

Frank Birgfeld, chief clerk of the United States Treasury, was elected treasurer of the Chest to take office on January 1, succeeding John A. Reilly.

The Children's Protective Association plans to bolster adoption services and to increase protective facilities for illegitimate babies by offering a service to the mothers during pregnancy which will plan babies' futures before birth.

Because the cost of food used by Chest institutions increased approximately 11 per cent during the past year the budget committee enlarged food budgets by 12 per cent over that spent in 1941.

Salary adjustments were made wherever possible because Chest agency salary scales are "far below that of Government and private business," the report stated. "All of our considerations and recommendations were made prior to the recent changes in Government salaries, however," it was pointed out.

The board voted approval of the following appropriations as recommended by the budget committee:

New Shuttle Bus to Serve Pentagon Area

An additional shuttle bus line between Seventh Street and Constitution Avenue Northwest and the Pentagon Building is planned by the Capital Transit Co., it was announced yesterday.

Permission to operate the line has been asked of the Interstate Commerce Commission and it is planned to start the new service by January 4.

Reasons cited for the additional buses are the increase in bus passenger traffic between the District and the Pentagon Building and the inconvenience some have experienced in having to go all the way to Nineteenth and C Streets, the point from which present buses now leave and return.

D. C. Fares to Be Accepted

District fares, transfers and weekly passes will be accepted with the customary additional 5 cents charged those going to or from the building. District transfers will be issued to passengers desiring them.

The new line will operate south on Constitution Avenue, from Seventh Street to Independence Avenue, thence on Independence to Fourteenth Street and then south on Fourteenth to the Highway Bridge and on to the building.

On the return trip to the District, passengers will be permitted to alight only at designated stops.

All to Be Paid at Pentagon

All fares will be paid at the Pentagon Building, including the additional 5 cents, for trips to the District. En route to the building, the District fare will be paid on entering the bus, and the additional 5 cents on arrival at the building.

There will be a morning service between 8 and 9 a. m. and an evening service between 5 and 6 p. m. Buses will be operated at three-minute intervals and will make 20 trips each way.

The morning load to the building now averages 7700 passengers, and the evening load 7600, a steady increase over former traffic.

Connaughton Will Direct Token Fight

John H. Connaughton of the Petworth Citizen's Association last night was chosen to represent the public utilities committee of the Federation of Citizen's Associations at a preliminary hearing before the PUC today on the Federation's motion to sell three tokens for 25 cents. The meeting was held in the Star Building.

Appointed by Chairman Lieut. Col. Milo H. Brinkley, United States Army, retired, of the Georgetown Association were the following permanent committees, on rates of the Potomac Electric Power Co. and the Washington Gas Light Co.: Charles H. Spencer, Takoma Park; Mrs. Mabel Morris, Fort Davis; W. A. Olsen, Chillum Heights; on taxicabs, A. D. Calvert, Lincoln Park; Alfred W. Sherman, Crestwood; Donald U. Gunter, Hillcrest; on rates and routes of transit lines, Frank P. Randolph, Bradbury Heights; W. Earl Nair, Washington Highlands; F. S. Sanford, American University Park; on the operation of Streetcars and buses, Francis C. Heisle, Chevy Chase; C. M. Maise, Kenilworth, and William J. Bartle of Stanton Park.

Citizens Group To Study Housing

In order to improve the critical wartime housing situation in the District, a special committee on housing and rent control was named last night by the Federation of Citizens' Association. The committee will organize at a meeting tonight in the Woodward Building.

Appointed to the committee, which is headed by Joseph H. Deckman of the Randle Heights Citizens Association, were: Charles H. Bates, Society of Natives, vice chairman; Mrs. Mabel Morris, Fort Davis, secretary; Guy H. Birdsall, Friendship; E. Brandstetter, Logan-Thomas Circle; Austin M. Cooper, West End; Ernest F. Henry, Petworth; Mrs. Ernest W. Howard, Columbia Heights; George H. Marshall, Summit Park; M. M. McLean, Brookland; Paul D. Sleeper, Crestwood; Martin G. Stecker, Trinidad, and William Clarke Taylor, Dupont Circle.

Traffic Toll Here Highest In 7 Years

One Killed, Another Dies of Injuries To Send Total Thus Far to 108

D. C. traffic deaths this year . . 108
Deaths this date last year . . 95
District total last year 95

One person was killed and another died of previous injuries yesterday as the result of traffic mishaps in the District, bringing the number of fatalities to date to 108, the highest figure in seven years.

Mrs. Willota Maddox, Negro, 23, 25 Q Street Northwest, was killed last night when struck by a Capital Transit Co. bus at Ninth and Rhode Island Avenue Northwest as she was crossing Rhode Island Avenue.

The driver of the bus was listed by police as Edmund C. Wilson, 27, 1653 Trinidad Avenue Northeast, who said he had four years experience driving buses. He was released by police pending action of a coroner's jury. The body of the woman, who was pronounced dead at the scene, was taken to the morgue.

Injuries Prove Fatal

Earlier yesterday Cleveland R. Ward, 55, of 3507 W Place Northwest died at Emergency Hospital as the result of injuries received in a traffic mishap in front of his home on Christmas Eve.

Police reported he was hit by a car driven by Virgil L. Phipps, 31, of 2720 Wisconsin Avenue. Among other injuries the victim sustained fractures of both legs.

In the meantime a coroner's jury ruled that a fatal accident at the Pentagon Building, Saturday, occurred outside District limits.

The jury's verdict exonerated Col. Eugene Elder, U. S. A. Signal Corps, of 4700 Connecticut Avenue Northwest, driver of the automobile which killed Rufus Smith, 45, a steamfitter, of 4453 Farraday Place Northwest.

Smith was crossing "Avenue B" at the west end of the Pentagon Building at 6 p. m. Saturday. He died at Emergency Hospital Sunday.

Dispute Not Settled

Though the six-man jury freed Colonel Elder with its verdict, the decision in no way settled the dispute over the jurisdiction of the territory which lays south of the Highway and Memorial Bridges.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald instructed the jurymen that they had no authority to hold Colonel Elder even if they thought he was responsible for the death.

"This hearing is to establish the facts in the case because the deceased died in Washington," Dr. MacDonald said. "You have no jurisdiction and are to consider only the questions, who, when, where and how.

"If you decide the death is other than accidental, you may only recommend that the defendant be held for Federal authorities."

The coroner's charge to the jury came about after Precinct Detective A. D. Clarke of the Accident Prevention Unit testified that in his opinion the place where Smith was struck was beyond the control of Washington police.

His statement came in response to a direct question from Dr. MacDonald: "Is this territory under your (Metropolitan Police) control?"

Area Not Controled

Clarke said that the Metropolitan Police never patrol that section and that in his opinion the land was in Virginia.

No other testimony was offered relative to prior decisions governing the boundaries of Washington and Virginia at this point.

After the hearing, which had been requested by Gen. John Lewis, commander of the military district of Washington, the coroner said the case did not establish a precedent.

"Investigation of this case disclosed the accident happened in territory beyond the District boundary—the old highwater mark of the Potomac which corresponds with Columbia Pike.

"If in the future persons are killed on War Department property at the Pentagon, the question of jurisdiction rests with the commanding general.

"Fatalities outside the Pentagon area, but in the same locality will be governed by the high-water mark," he said.

Driver Ordered Held

At a second inquest yesterday the jury ordered a 24-year-old man held for the action of Police Court under the Negligent Homicide Act. The defendant, Edwin H. Moran of Bradbury Heights, Md., was driving an automobile which struck and killed Miss Frances Skrabski, 19, of 2820 Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast, Sunday night.

Miss Skrabski was fatally injured while crossing the 2800 block Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast, with a companion, Emily Marmury, 19, of the same address. The latter is still confined to Casualty Hospital.

With the second death yesterday, the District traffic toll was raised to 108. Not since 1938 when the total reached 113 has Washington recorded more than 105 deaths.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Having Stayed With Hairshirt Marriage 29 Years, Until 5 Children Were Grown, Woman Now Thinks Of Packing Bags, Leaving Home to Start Life Anew

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My mother has asked me to secure your advice on a problem which confronts her. She has been married for 29 years to one of the most difficult men that ever lived; but because his shortcoming were of the less dramatic variety, she has tolerated him (as she always says) "for the sake of the children." (There are five of us.) My father has a "Major Hoople" complex. He will not work at anything he considers a "job." He must have a "position." Or, failing that, he must do something that puts him in a "noble" light,—i. e., sacrificing himself for the sake of others. As, for instance, the time when he sold kitchen gadgets from door to door. But if any one of us five children can provide the wherewithal to buy food for the family, he will do nothing. My childhood was a nightmare of insecurity, because father was always out of work or going to be! It seems he just cannot work anywhere without "telling somebody where to get off."

Man Would 'Turn Ugly,' If She Asked Divorce

As a result, mother has gradually, over a period of years, taken on the family bread-winner role. She runs a small rooming house in addition to holding a Government job. At present, father is working (for the first time in nearly a year), but contributes to the household upkeep only when mother's funds are so low that she must have $5 or $10 to tide her through to her next pay day. Also, father has "moods." He has spells of being cantankerous and loudly argumentative and other spells when he doesn't speak to mother for days. I think mother has always fervently hoped that dad would "straighten out;" but he is such a mass of emotional contradictions that we think psychiatric treatment would be necessary to normalize him. And we could never enlist his co-operation in such a venture. He would say that none of us knew what we were talking about.

Now for the latest development: Mother says she can't stand the present situation any longer and that when the youngest boy is called into the Army, she is going to give up her home (and the rooming-house business) and find lodgings elsewhere. She says she just doesn't have the courage to stand her ground and start divorce proceedings, because she feels sure that father would turn very ugly and have to be bodily removed from the premises. And with that I agree. But I maintain that "taking a room" would not solve the problem of dad's pestiferousness. Also, I hate to see the poor soul driven from her home. So, can you please help,—by giving us your opinion?

'Git-Up-and-Git' Always Admirable

DEAR E. H. L.: If all your mother's five children will be financially independent of family support, when your youngest brother has joined the Army; and if your mother would, at that time, be able to pay her own way on her Government worker income, then it might be a good gamble for her to shake the dust of home and the rooming house business off her feet and take a flyer at living apart from your father,—if only in a hall bedroom somewhere. Unless, of course, the home in which she lives is family property. In that event,—supposing she has pinched pennies the past 30 years to acquire the house, either in your father's name or as a joint possession,—it probably would be a foolhardy mistake on her part to walk out and leave it to him, just because he personally has become anathema to her. But if it would be simply a case of evacuating rented property, and possibly forfeiting possession of some battered household furnishings,—as the price of "getting shut of" his maddeningly irritating society,—then I would say: More power to her for having the "get-up-and-get" to spunkily consider striking out for herself, leaving her Old-Man-of-the-Sea to fend for himself, now that the chapter of child-rearing is done.

If the undertaking is to turn out well for her, however, she must be quite sure in her own mind, before taking the step, that any arrangement which permits her to "live and move and have her being" apart from your father is preferable to occupying the same house with him, while he persists in the character of Major Hoople,—in which role he is probably helplessly confirmed, as a result of having devoted perhaps 50-odd years to practicing it. She must be prepared to go in confident spirit, with a sense of having freely elected a desirable course. She must be fired by the feeling that she is taking a seven-league stride toward "better days ahead," regardless of incidental penalties she may have to pay. On no account should she slip forlornly away on the theory that she is "a poor soul driven from her home,"—because if she takes her departure on that defeatist note, her negative emotions will multiply with each new challenge to be met, until finally she will bog down completely in the distrait conclusion that she "jumped from the frying pan into the fire."

Only the Brave Win Through to Contentment

While I feel it would be unwise for any third party to presume, upon the basis of this second-hand story of her case, to urge either a "go" or "stay" decision upon your mother,—who must search her own heart for guidance in making a right choice,—I think she should be told, for what it may be worth, that it is not uncommon for women of her age, with a comparable marriage history, to break traces (as she thinks of doing) when the children are grown, and to claim a measure of mature-age contentment, as a result of so doing, that would have been permanently denied them, if they had continued to try to cope with a no-account husband.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

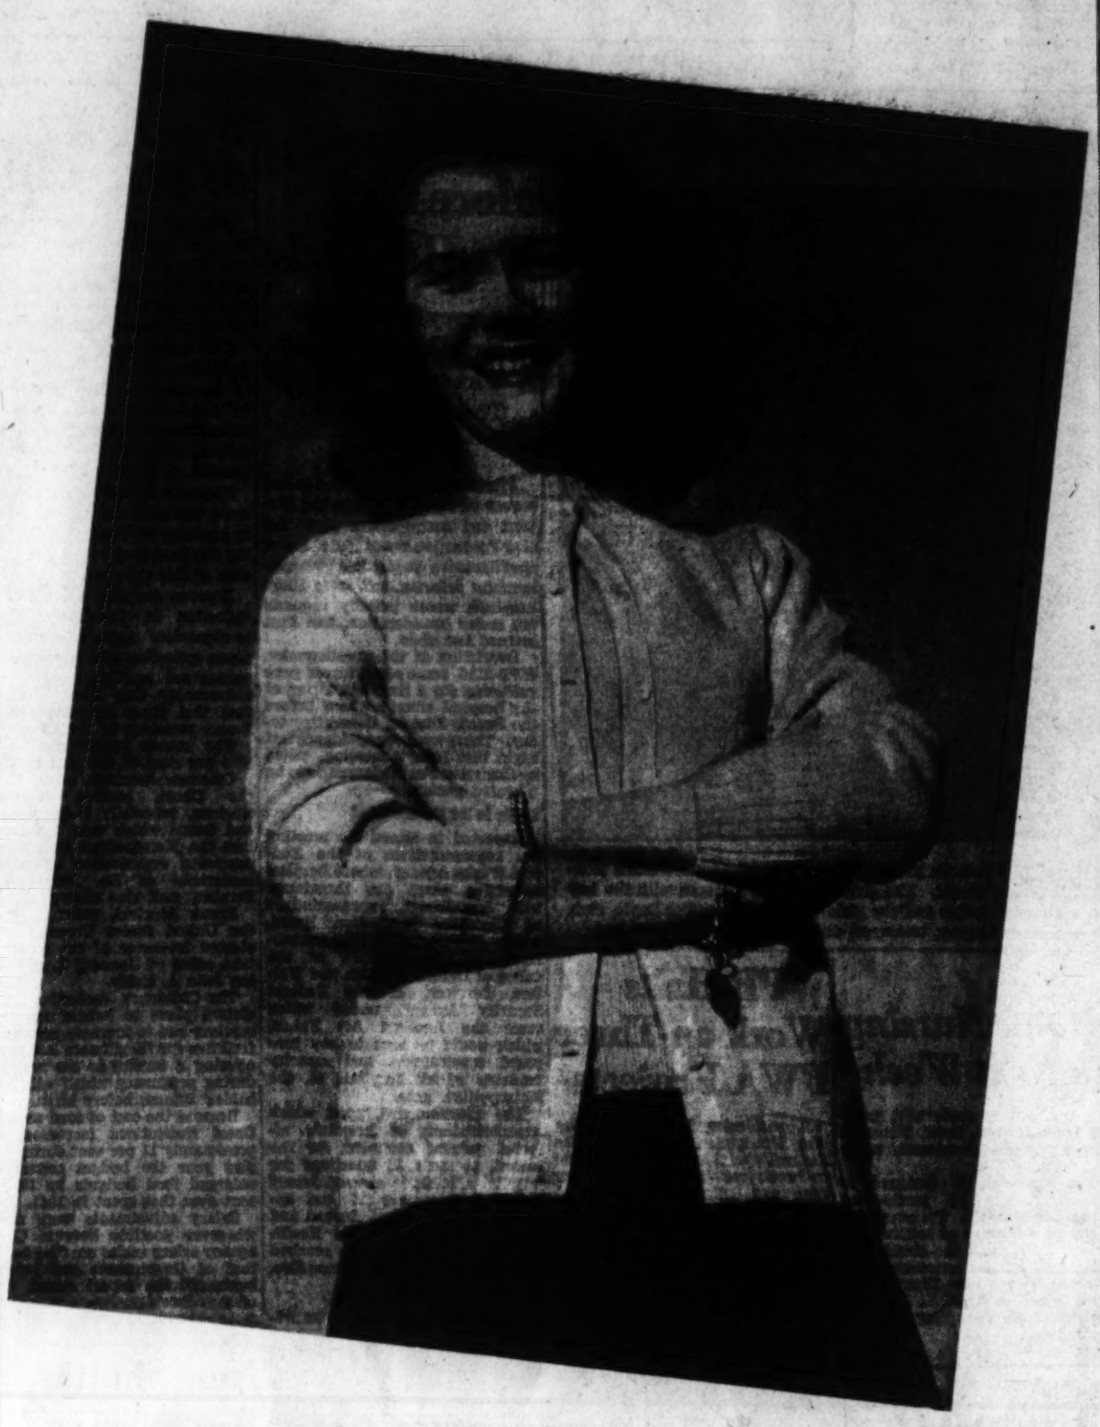
The Gentler Sex



By Malvina Lindsay

Hail the Amazon!

CHALK UP among this war's compensations the dying gasp of the "frail female." The wartime cult of health is abruptly ending a feminine tradition that has been slowly on its way out for a good many years, but which nevertheless up to the present has produced too many women afflicted with the boast that they were "not strong" or "terribly nervous."

Now, everywhere you turn, you run on to advice as to how women can become stronger and healthier to meet their wartime obligations. WAACS and WAVES, stepping along, lithe, brown and vigorous, present a model for soft, overfed matrons to strive for. Women's social gatherings find vitamins (especially those reputed to add eye luster and verve) are the absorbing topic of the day. Beauty advisers are veering from cosmetics to food and exercise. And colleges, which long have stressed physical fitness programs, are putting added emphasis on these courses and are promoting the ideal of feminine buxomness by the devices of modern advertising.

MOUNT HOLYOKE college's "drive" in behalf of healthier students is an example of this. Four health rules are kept constantly before the students by poster, sign and announcement. They are: "Eight hours' sleep, three good meals a day, an hour's exercise a day—and smile."

Since milk is provided at 9:30 o'clock each night for students, midnight snacks have largely disappeared. In order to help the students get their daily hour of exercise, they are given aid in working out time budgets. Freshmen and sophomores have been given a set of motor-ability tests designed as an incentive for physical development and improvement.

Similar emphasis on health programs is being given at most colleges in an effort to fit women for more efficient war and post-war activity.

THUS it seems the ideal of womanly vigor is being so firmly grounded that it is doubtful that it will ever be dislodged again by feminine fainters, flappers, glamour girls, neurotics or hospital addicts.

It is singular that in a country so youthful and lusty as this that the old "frail female" ideal would have been so hard to uproot. Early English novels with their fainting heroines exerted such a strong influence on American social life for two centuries that many women deliberately cultivated and "enjoyed" ill health. Even such a forthright person as Abigail Adams referring in her letters to her girlhood, says—one fancies with a trifle of pride, "I was always sick." The heroine of Janice Meredith, a novel of Revolutionary days, confesses to her best friend the humiliating secret that at times she has a voracious appetite!

Ill, or rather "delicate" health persisted as a basis of feminine charm well through the nineteenth century. Writings of that era indicate that many a maiden looked forward with morbid romanticism to a decline and early death. And even though the bicycle girl came along in the 90's, yet in 1905 we find croquet listed as the most popular feminine "sport."

PHYSICAL culture or "gym" courses during the early decades of the twentieth century made a gradual assault on the cult of frail femininity. So did tennis, golf and other outdoor sports. But it was really not until the 1920's that the emancipated young women of the jazz era began to develop and exhibit their physical prowess. And this was motivated, not by a health ideal, but rather one of social independence. In fact, the hollow-chested, slouching flapper and her adult imitators scorned the cultivation of physical fitness as something entirely too wholesome and righteous.

Yet beauty pageants and one-piece bathing suits popularized beach life and brought along the suntan fad. And sports clothes began taking the center of the fashion stage. Health was surely on its way after that, with the milk and tomato juice crazes, the nudist camps and the fashion emphasis on youthful clothes for everyone under 90. But the glamour girl also was in and after her the elegant female and it was not in the role of either to look too cornfed. Hence the diet craze.

THE HEALTH movement countered with vitamin capsules and the popularity of skiing and skating and other winter sports. Also women began to find that to have a Duchess of Windsor figure and vitality without looking like hags they would have to do something more than go on 18-day diets. And finally the war changed the pursuit of health from a vanity into a patriotic duty.

However, down through the years women seem to have reluctantly relinquished their delicate female status. Even now they frequently must fight the temptation to turn to the role of an invalid either as an escape or as a means of attracting attention. Even now they find it hard not to relapse into whining plaintive tones when they find themselves a bit under the weather.

In a way their struggle has been a mental climb from childhood to maturity. The cult of frail femininity once offered them a refuge from many of the duties and responsibilities of life. It was also an excuse for a parasitic existence. But now the pursuit of health and vigor means that more will be expected of them as members of society. It also means that in like ratio they will receive the rewards of a fuller existence.

Here Are Some Tips on Entertaining Servicemen

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Lavish entertaining for our own amusement is definitely out for the duration . . . but there is no priority on the fun we can give to our servicemen in our homes. New Year's Eve might be a good time to start turning your home into a morale-builder, a good time to make your roof-tree ring with "on leave" laughter.

Your "guest list" will take care of itself if you call your local U. S. O. and tell them how many service men you can entertain; but, since no party can be quite a success without feminine partners, you will have to look to your own friends' daughters and their friends to complete your list. A group of 20 can be handled quite easily in a small home or even apartment.

Those boys don't want any ostentation or formality, but don't think that they won't appreciate your best china and gleaming silver—with plenty of home-cooked food and your own smiling pride in presenting your home at its holiday best. Why not have a "late buffet"—food is always a good mixer for a party. Invite your servicemen and their partners to arrive at 9 p. m. and serve them a hearty but simple supper—a hot casserole, home-made biscuits, a green salad, a fruit bowl, plenty of cookies and a pitcher of ice-cold chocolate milk (if you can get the chocolate). Top the meal with ice cream and one of your best home-made cakes (using corn syrup instead of sugar, of course).

Well-fed, your party will be off to a good start. Clear one room for dancing and use the sun porch for games. Dance music is almost continuous on the radio New Year's Eve but recordings are surefire for jazz addicts. If you are not a "platter fan" merely pass the word among the girls you invite, and they'll bring along all the young records you could need—and even a victrola if you haven't one. Let your guests dictate the tempo of the party—some will want to just sit on the stairs and chat, others will want to dance and others may prefer to play cards or other games (which you'll have handy) in the sun room. This is one party where the hostess will take orders from her guests—and like it!

As the old year wanes, bring out a punch bowl and more cookies and, of course, all the time-honored noise makers and the like, and when the witching hour arrives join in the whoops and good wishes. But, a word to the wise, don't intrude too much on your guests.

Women's Fashions Underwent Many Changes in 1942

By Corrinne Hardesty

New York, Dec. 29.—The year 1942 will go down as the one in which the American woman, besides learning to wear cotton stockings, had her figure frozen by WPB Order L-85.

The duration feminine costume, a real highlight of woman's 1942, was designed to cover up the wearer, keep her warm, last indefinitely, allow freedom for work, and above all comply with the WPB's L-85 order curtailing use of fabrics.

This is the first time these characteristics have dominated woman's dress, a survey of fashion authorities showed today, since pioneer women settled on the last frontier and started social activities.

A survey showed that women at large are going for durability, simplicity and as much gaiety as they can garner, priorities being what they are.

Women not at large—those in the military branches—are getting the designers' best efforts and the cream of materials.

Here are some other milestones:

Fabric saving brought the bolero, trouser pleats and hobble skirts.

Fuel rationing brought the shawl, the quilted frock or jacket, long underwear and the cover-up evening dress into the wardrobe, and "cozy" and "bundling" into the vocabulary.

War work sent the high heel skidding out of fashion and brought in the walking oxford.

Curtailment in variety of fabrics and styles led to heaped up trimmings made of nonpriority materials, such as the sequin-studded topcoat, designed for walking to parties, by Traina-Norell and a dinner suit by Fira Beneson with stripes of bugle beads and sequins.

Shortages taught every woman to examine fabrics for quality and ready-made garments for workmanship.

How to dress for going to an air raid, when being a warden or an airplane spotter drove designers to some practical and fantastic coats, suits and coveralls—not overlooking the Winston Churchill teddy-bear suit.

What to wear in a defense plant, where safety, not style, counts, brought thousands of women their first Lilly Dache hat—something mostly for idle women who could pay $25 and up for a bit of ribbon and a flower. Dache designed a defense helmet adopted in many plants where headcovering is required.

The girls who joined the WAVES got the benefit of, for most of them, their first, Mainbocher costume, something heretofore made for the world's 10 best-dressed women and those who wished they were. He designed what is generally conceded to be the nattiest of the uniforms for women.

The zoot suit was executed for its crimes against shortages and decency, and the sweater girl was just plain forgotten.

Woman's Hobby Leads To Important War Industry

The Yankee ingenuity of one woman may play a big part in winning this war . . . and it all started because the woman, Mrs. Mary Parker of Waban, Mass., had a hobby.

Her husband, who was in the lumber business, got an idea that if the right plastic or resin could be fused with wood it might retain its luster and marking and still have a surface that could defy rough usage.

Mrs. Parker became fascinated with the idea, her five children were in school, her home efficiently managed, so she decided to experiment with the resin wood in her spare time. The fact that she had no knowledge of chemistry was an obstacle, but she finally developed a resin that proved heat-proof (a lighted cigarette won't harm it), moisture-proof (even to alcohol), and scratch-proof.

She took thin strips of wood 1-16 of an inch thick, wove them together for flexibility, treated them with the resin, and subjected them to tremendous pressure and heat for as long as half an hour, and from this development a new industry was born.

Soon the production outgrew the Parker basement and the business moved into a modern factory, where Mr. Parker—who gave up his lumber business—took care of the management. Here they turned out wooden jewelry, compact cases, lamp shades, waste baskets, cigarette boxes, table tops, and lots of other things.

But right now the factory is 100 per cent in war work. Using the same process, the company is now turning out extremely light and efficient airplane propellers.

Mary Parker can look confidently to the years after the war, too. She's still experimenting on a small press in her own laboratory in the factory . . . working on new ideas for the future. A new idea is a challenge to her—a hobby, a means to success for her and better living for all of us.

Women 'OWLS' Join British Signal Corps

London, (By Cable).—Within the next six months, Britain's Auxiliary Territorial Service wants 1000 recruits for the "OWLS"—operators of wireless and telegraph, an entirely new field of activity for women.

The OWLS will be the first A. T. S. members to transmit and receive messages in Morse Code. When they have finished their 12 weeks' training at an antiaircraft corps of signals school, they will be posted to gun operation rooms in the antiaircraft command or in the signals office at military headquarters throughout the country, to work in cooperation with the Royal Corps of Signals.

Many of the recruits are expected to be drawn from the more than 5000 women civil servants who are leaving their offices within the next few weeks to join the services. These women are all between the ages of 20 and 30; but typists and clerk typists are barred from leaving their jobs because the government is already short of women in this category.

The recruits selected must have exceptional intelligence, a high standard of accuracy, good hearing and nimble fingers.

They also require plenty of staying power, the ability to concentrate, and a calm temperament to enable them to cope with rush and urgent messages without getting panicky.

Their 12 weeks' course includes training in the procedure of sending and receiving messages, signal office duties, lectures on electricity and wireless theory, and practical demonstrations in the maintenance of their instruments. Before graduating, they must be able to transmit and receive Morse messages at the rate of 15 words a minute, make minor adjustments to their sets and be capable of diagnosing serious faults. The operators learn to pack and unpack their sets, check and clean them daily, change the tubes, test and fit the batteries, renew the accumulators and adjust the buzzers.

The first A. T. S. OWLS are proving excellent pupils, and the instructors are amazed to discover how quickly they can learn Morse. Some of them have been known to master the alphabet in three hours.

CHARM CLINIC By Colette

If your eyes are rather small—

—Don't

Don't let your eyebrows grow wild and bushy. They overshadow small eyes, as does too much lipstick, and rouge placed low on the cheeks. Dark eyeshadow makes the eyes appear sunken and they seem even smaller. Heavy bangs must be avoided.

Do—

Do tweeze the eyebrows underneath and arch them just as high as possible, still keeping them natural looking. From the outer corner of the eye, pencil a straight, fine line. At the inner corner by the nose, place a dot of rouge—remember your dolls? Use rouge as close as possible under the eyes. Veritable miracles can be accomplished with artificial eyelashes. Experiment with makeup until the desired effect is achieved.

Your Figure, Madame!

Just Relax—
It Will Keep You Fit

By Ida Jean Kain

Being able to relax at will has been credited with many a success back in the "good old days." But during wartime, it seems to be such a big factor in keeping fit despite strain that learning how has practically ceased to be optional.

To work effectively at any time, it is necessary to acquire a normal rhythm of effort and rest, of tension and release. Needless to say, this rhythm is more important now than ever before.

We are apt to think of relaxation as merely doing nothing after a hard day. But it is really doing something else—for a change. For example, you may be a war worker and doing work that means actively using your muscles all day. A good change for you might be a movie, a game of bridge, or any enjoyable mental diversion. You have already earned the pleasant fatigue that enables you to relax your muscles.

But if you are an office worker and sit at your job and use your eyes constantly, what you need is the combination of a physical workout and mental diversion. You will get relaxation by going bowling, ice skating, visiting friends, or romping with the children.

Aside from following a relaxation plan, you can let up in other ways. In sitting, let the chair support you. When you walk, remember that keeping your shoulders relaxed is as good a rule as stretching slim through the midriff. In bed, try to sink down into the mattress—don't "hold on" with your muscles (if you do, counting sheep won't help you to sleep!) And after you exercise, carry out the "effort, relax" principle by letting all tension ebb out of your muscles.

There are certain easy exercises which help you to recognize the difference between tension and relaxation and which form an excellent springboard to relaxing at will. These exercises are being taught in a number of our leading colleges and universities.

One of the first lessons stresses the release of tension in specific muscle groups. This is important because continued hypertension in the muscles affects the nervous system and interferes with the smooth running of the internal organs.

It's an exercise to lie on the back on the floor with a rolled-up towel just beneath the shoulder blades. This is one of the high tension areas and the position tends to relieve discomfort. Arms should be overhead, palms turned up, to push the rib cage apart and impart a feeling of well being. If you notice a tautness at the base of the skull, place another hard roll directly at that point. When the discomfort is in the lower back, have a roll under the knees.

To get the feel of relaxation, lift the arm in the air and let it come down slowly until it rests on the floor, very loosely. Pay particular attention to the way your arm feels while you are holding it in the air, and again when it lies limp on the floor. Experiment with both arms and legs and study the difference between effort and the lack of any effort.

To straighten rounded shoulders: Lie on back on narrow table. Flex knees, pull small of back down to touch board. Have books of equal weight in each hand, palms turned out. Move arms from shoulders, slowly lowering and raising to table level.

Your Baby And Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

Every step a child takes toward independence from the parent is apt to be a painful one. Children feel secure in familiar situations and doing familiar things and when we attempt to wean them from them they rebel. The "only" child who spends all of every day with a loving and protective parent is most unwilling to get along without her.

Mrs. H. L. G. describes her 8-month-old baby as healthy and a good eater and sleeper. "He weighs 19 pounds but, despite his good health, never seems to be happy unless I am with him.

"I was determined not to have a spoiled child and I am not sure that he is. For occasionally one of his toys will occupy him for quite a while. But ordinarily he seems to lose interest quickly.

"If I leave him to go into another room he begins to cry. Sometimes when I am with him he pays no attention to me, but he knows the minute I leave.

"Perhaps his toys aren't of the type that amuses him. Could you suggest something suitable? He is a smart little baby and can be as happy and gay as anyone."

If from birth a baby's bed had always had a bright pink blanket on it, bed would not seem to be bed without it. He has always had you, like a pink blanket, making all the activities of his day familiar and secure. Without you he is lost. But he must begin to get used to situations of which you are not a part. That is his first lesson in independence. He must discover that he can be happy when you are absent. He can only discover this by experience.

Before you leave the room, change the baby's position or give him a new toy to engage his attention. Make frequent trips in and out but do not pretend to notice his crying or make any attempt to soothe it.

What baby will discover is that regardless of whether he cries you will come back, and once he accepts this you can make your absences longer and longer, as he will not be apt to fuss until you do return.

It's well to get him used to the services of persons in the home — such as Daddy — or persons who come into the home. Just to be changed or fed or put down for his nap by some other person convinces the baby that he can be happy and well cared for even if you are not present.

Dentist Can Help One Regain Comfort After Loss of Teeth

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Everybody is hereby warned that when they come to the period of life when they begin to lose teeth, they should fight against it as hard as possible. Only those who have lost their teeth know how valuable and comfortable they were compared to any substitutes for them. Some patients and some dentists are willing to sacrifice teeth very lightly, but most dentists are very conservative and do everything they can to save as many teeth as possible.

Dr. Clendening

After the event has occurred, however, and you have what is known as an edentulous mouth, there are many methods to be used to help bring back a reasonable amount of comfort. In the first place, the dentists should study the mentality and the needs of the patient.

There should be a long talk and a thorough understanding of just how much the patient expects and just what he wants. Then the patient should understand that a complete diagnostic study, in order to make him as comfortable as possible, is a somewhat elaborate procedure. If the patient does not consent to a complete diagnostic study, the ultimate result is likely to be very unsatisfactory.

Those who have had experience say that a preliminary study before denture construction is begun reduces dissension and dissatisfaction to a minimum. It also prevents make-overs and the necessity to recast dentures a second, third or even a fourth time.

The diagnosis and study consists in the first place of x-rays of the jaws; second, impressions of the jaws on plastic materials and making a permanent plaster or stone cast; third, transillumination of ridges and sinuses; fourth, inspection of throat, tongue, lips and cheeks; fifth, construction of diagnostic bite plates and the taking of the diagnostic bite. There are a few other procedures which the dentist will want to do which are somewhat too technical to discuss here.

The temporary diagnostic bite plates are constructed of plastic base plate wax and waxes that differ in color. Light pink wax forms that portion of the bite above the ridge plane while a tooth-tinted wax forms the bite line.

Mental Makeup of Patient

Much of the success of a permanent denture depends upon the mental makeup of the patient. One dentist classifies his patients on the basis of whether they are philosophical, exacting, hysterical or indifferent. A patient either above or below the average emotional level makes a poor denture patient.

Often the general health of the patient, his circulatory system, whether or not he is anemic and the condition of the nervous system will ruin the success of the best-planned work of this kind.

Cooperation of Patient

After the diagnosis is made, the dentist should talk over all the whys and wherefores with the patient, who is entitled to know the results of the study and the exact conditions in order that he may cooperate and understand just what he is supposed to do.

Very important is a periodic check-up as to whether or not the denture is comfortable. These check-ups give the dentist an opportunity of observing his successes and are educational to him. In these days of change new materials are being used by dentists and a periodic check-up enables the patient to have the advantage of any improvements that have been made in this field. No dentist can really be held responsible for the success or failure of dentistry unless he is given the opportunity to make frequent check-ups with the patient to see how he is reacting to the new conditions.

New Year Suggestions Offered For Clubgoers of D. C. Area

By Genevieve Reynolds
The Post Club Editor

Swinging around the corner is the new year. What about those resolutions? Made in good faith—yes, they are broken too easily. Nevertheless, let's get the mutterings out of our systems and start anew.

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

Since it's easier to preach than to practice, I'll start with you — my clubgoers. These are just a few resolutions that I hope you will make and keep.

National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution:

I will avoid all future controversies that might involve race disputes. But if I take a stand on such matters will stick to my guns—even if I have to relinquish beautiful, stately Constitution Hall for the duration. Furthermore, I will see that the club reporters get an equal break on the news stories—stop up the leaks that give exclusives to any individual reporter. Or, I will divide the scoops. In addition, I'll see to it that my overly stout members throw away their splashy print evening dresses—and never, never again wear flat-heeled, walking shoes with evening attire. Regardless, I will go on taking pride in the history and achievements of my country and I will continue to inculcate the love of same in the youth of the country. I will keep my pride in my heritage but will not bore people by digging up the ancestry on the slightest provocation.

Eliminate Squabbles

District Federation of Women's Clubs:

Before adopting resolutions and suggesting new laws, I will become thoroughly acquainted with the existing laws so as not to make the organization ridiculous. I will eliminate squabbles and petty jealousies among my members. But on the credit side, I will continue the excellent beginnings inaugurated in defense work.

District of Columbia Voteless League of Women Voters:

I will continue to keep my eyes focused on the District's problems and put all my energies into obtaining the vote. But I do wish you would move up the meetings to an earlier hour so that I could get the story in time for the next day's edition.

Women's National Democratic Club:

I will eliminate long, windy introductions of speakers. Also, I would put more members to work so that the few doers could take a rest.

Publicity chairman in general:

I resolve not to be harassed by domineering officers and petulant publicity hounds who continually want late, last-minute notices. I will insist that items be given to me enough in advance to meet the deadlines of the club editors.

Forget the Drivel

Otherwise I would refuse to take them . . . and bravely. I will refuse to send in a lot of drivel about the organization and its members, but I will be alert to the news-worthy doings that deserve recognition . . . If anything unusual occurs, I'd know that it was a story—and get it in. I'd get copy of speeches in advance whenever possible to assure coverage in case no reporter was there to take notes. Furthermore, I will see that the speech reaches the club editors to make the deadline, and if I don't know the deadlines of all the papers will make it my business to learn them.

Now, it's time that I make a few new year's resolution myself. So here goes the first one: I will not hold grudges against irate club members who insist on telling my faults to the boss . . . a certain item was omitted or a mixup on time in appointments occurred. I will be at my desk at 2 p. m. each day to receive incoming calls until 3 p. m. If, the unexpected occurs and I cannot be there then, will leave word with the operator the exact time I can be reached. I will make the greatest efforts possible to meet my club members personally . . . it's much more fun to know you. I resolve to be on time . . . to reduce my weight . . . go to bed early . . . to get up earlier . . . read more books and magazines to keep alert to world events but not to overlook the problems at home . . . to smile more, and frown less. I will try to understand all your problems and forget my own.

Mutterings are over—now I wish you all a happy new year.

Wine stains may be removed from napkins and tablecloths by stretching them over a bowl, securing with an elastic band, and covering stain with a generous amount of salt. Hold a kettle of boiling water about 18 inches above cloth and pour at least a pint through the cloth. Launder.

The PRINCESS of GRATZEN

By LOUIS ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM

Synopsis

Madame Fabre-Lusignan lives at the Chateau Philibert in Canada served by her butler, Rudolph. Princess Meridel of Gratzen and her young cousins, Rosine and Pol Martin, arrive in Quebec to find their rich uncle, Baron Is Morpin—in reality, Rudolph. Madame insists that the young people come to the chateau, Rudolph appearing as owner, she as housekeeper. They open Philibert to other refugee children. Meridel discovers the deception and leaves with her cousins and Rudolph. Madame's favorite nephew, Michel, has run away to France three years before and there is a suspicion that he is in the German army. His brother, Roger, of the Canadian Air Force, is in love with Meridel. Madame loses much of her fortune. She invites Rudolph, Meridel and the little ones to the chateau for the Christmas holidays.

Chapter XX

Long after the little ones, tired and happy and eager for the morning and the opening of the gifts that would be theirs, had gone to bed, madame and Meridel and Roger and Rudolph Morpin sat before the open fire in the living room and talked little and were happy just to be there together on this night, to thank God for His mercies and to think of those who were on the sea, or on the battlefields or in the sky, and to speak of them in hushed voices.

The wind had come up and whistled and whined about the walls of Philibert and rumbled in the great chimney and keened about the eaves. Somewhere a shutter banged and rattled and then was still. The house was full of strange sounds, as old houses are at night. Only a few lights burned in the room where they sat, but the flames of the burning logs of beech and rock maple danced and made dancing waves of brightness shimmer along the walls.

Rudolph had left the room silently, at a nod from madame, who was very grand, very happy, in mauve silk and seed pearls. Gosner and the servants had been sent to bed. Rudolph returned with wine, with glasses, and performed his mystic rights as if the baronial episode in his career had never really been. Soon he planned to leave the Coq d'or, though still retaining his profitable interest in that thriving and picturesque hostelry, and return to Philibert to serve her to whom he owed his first allegiance.

Madame raised the delicate, thin-stemmed glass and watched the ruby fires in the depths of the wine, the warm heart's blood of the Burgundy grapes.

"To Christmas," she said, "and to this peace that we have here at Philibert; to the day when all the world will know it again; to the love and well-being of the little children."

Solemnly, reverently, they drank that toast. Peace and well-being. Eyes strayed to the bright fire on the hearth, to the holly wreaths in the windows, the garlands of evergreen, the mistletoe. And they listened to the sharp sad voices of the wind and heard, afar off, like a rushing tide, the sweep of it through the great trees of the forest. Good to be sheltered on such a night, to have warmth and cheer——

Somewhere again, in a lull of the wind, there was a sound as of a shutter blowing loose. Madame looked at Rudolph and waited, but the noise did not come again. In the great hall outside, the clock chimed 11 long booming strokes and Roger verified his wrist watch with it.

"You will please excuse me," he said, rising. "I have to call Montreal at this time. Some routine."

He smiled down at Meridel, briefly his finger tips touched her hair as he passed on his way to the alcove where the telephone was located. Presently he came back, looking puzzled. "No life there," he said. "I can't get the operator."

"The line was all right an hour ago." Madame sat up in her chair. "I suppose something has gone wrong. It's cold enough to freeze the wires, I dare say."

"Shall I try one of the other phones?" suggested Rudolph. "It may be that only this one——"

A Good Excuse

"Thank you, no." Roger settled back in his chair, drawn close to Meridel's. "I have an excellent excuse for not reporting. Suppose I had got them and was told to be back in Montreal tonight. Think of having to leave such company, such a fire, such an occasion, and perhaps be heading for the wide Atlantic before morning." He shivered. "It's not fit for a polar bear to be out. I'll wager it's 20 below zero."

"Twenty-four degrees, monsieur," said Rudolph. "I glanced at the thermometer when I went down to fetch the wine. One can almost touch the cold. It must be punishment to fly in such weather as this."

Roger looked grim. He held up his glass. "Let's drive our cares away this night," he said. "I don't want to think of yesterday's grief or the darkness tomorrow may bring. I want this hour. Will you think me greedy, Meridel, for wanting it so much?"

The firelight gleamed on her hair, on the thick braids crossing her head as she turned to him. "For all our sakes I wish it could last forever, Roger. Let us drink to this hour."

"There is one more toast," said madame slowly, after that was drunk. "And tonight, somehow, I do not hesitate to propose it. You know what it is, Roger—you all know—let us drink to Michel."

Intruders

Suddenly, as if a hand invisible had dashed the glass from her lips, the fragile bit of crystal the old lady held was shattered on the hearthstone at her feet and the wine spread like blood. Her hand stayed halted near her lips. The others were on their feet, staring at the two men in sheepskin jackets who stood in the wide doorway, at the dark menace of the automatic the short one held, at the grim, red-stubbled visage of the tall one who surveyed them with blue eyes cold as the ice of the river.

"Be quiet, all of you," said he. And the voice was the voice of Michel Fabre—but how altered, how harsh, how hateful!" We are sorry to spoil this sweetly sentimental occasion, but our lives are important to us. We escaped from your prison camp back in the woods. You will remember me as Oberleutnant Faber. My companion is Manfred Kehl. What we want from you, my friends, is the key of the station wagon parked in front of the house. You will have them, brother." He looked at Roger, his face expressionless. "Bring them here."

"The laughing soldier who killed Bonhomme Fricot," said madame softly. "And I thought it was some wild story the children had made up."

Michel started. His eyes strayed from Roger to the scornful face of his aunt. "We have no time for talk. The keys, please; and at once. We cut your telephone wires and have fixed the other car so it will not go. Ah—" he had seen Roger reach for a bronze bookend as he passed behind a chair and in one leap he was on him. His fist shot out and cracked cruelly against his brother's mouth, bloodying it, sending Roger crashing to the floor.

"Fool! You would not have tried that had you known how good Manfred is with the trigger." He bent and took the keys from Roger's pocket. "Thank you." He stood up. "And you, my friends. Let this not spoil your Christmas. It is war, you know—a war whose demands transcend anything else."

"Even the love of God and the love of your brother," said Meridel.

"Princess of Gratzen." Oberleutnant Faber bowed stiffly. "I salute you. And yes—even perhaps such loves as you mention, I am glad you have found sanctuary in this country. It would be a shame for such beauty as yours to suffer."

"Make haste!" said Kehl in German. "There is no time for talk. You know the pretty one? She is the Princess of Gratzen, Hein?" He bowed slightly, his mouth set in a hard smile. "She is warm here, nicht? We shall go now."

Martha Ellyn's Platter Chatter

How to Buy and Cook Roasting Fowl for Best Results

The Quack Department may have to take over to furnish the birds for New Year's dinners. Turkeys may be scarce. But that gives ducks and geese an opportunity to take on new popularity. They well deserve it for their natural flavor and utility.

MARTHA ELLYN

Regular enjoyment of ducks and geese on the dinner board is more than festive. Ducks and geese are not rationed so they can help balance the meat supply.

Of course duck and goose must be young for roasting. You can't tell a book by its jacket, and the average person can't tell a tender duck or goose from the outside.

How to Buy

Here are a few hints for buying these birds.

The simple, sure test is to pinch the windpipe—if rubbery it is a young bird: but if it cracks it is too old to roast! When not feasible to apply this test, the integrity of the dealer may usually be relied upon.

Popular roasting sizes for ducks are 4 to 7 pounds; for geese, 8 to 12 pounds. Four people can be amply served with a 4- or 5-pound duck, or allow 1 pound market dressed weight (head and feet on, picked but not drawn) per person. For goose allow 1½ pounds per person, a 12-pound goose should serve eight persons.

Once you get your bird in the kitchen you will have to give it the "fine tooth" going over. But part of an attractive platter appearance and easy carving depends upon how the bird is readied at the market. The same techniques used in preparing chicken and turkey hold for duck and goose. Cut the neck skin down the center back to the shoulder. Free skin from neck, cut neck off close to body. Keep rear opening for drawing as small as possible. The wing tip and first joint may be cut off if desired leaving only the second joint, which is the meaty portion of the wing, attached to the body. Cut out the oil sac in the back, just above the tail. Cook neck and wing parts with giblets.

When you start making the bird ready for the pan, remove the pinfeathers. Some cooks use tweezers to eliminate the stubborn pinfeathers. Singe. Wash outside skin thoroughly. Rinse cavity with cold water (do not soak). Dry with cloth. The possibility of getting rid of some fat in goose appeals to those tastes preferring a dryer meat. Lay cleaned goose on rack in a shallow pan and place in moderately hot oven, 375 to 400 degrees. Heat until fat starts to run, 15 to 20 minutes. Remove from oven. Tip goose to let fat in body cavity run out. Pour off fat from pan. Return to oven and repeat this process 2 or 3 times or until fat ceases to drip freely. The goose now is ready for stuffing and trussing.

The Stuffing

Appropraite stuffings are many and varied. Placing a quartered apple, a halved onion and a rib or two of celery in the cavity of the bird is the classic way to roast duck and goose. After roasting, the apple and vegetables are discarded. But modern duck and goose have been bred carefully for fine flavor so that stuffed duck and goose are quite as popular and delicious as stuffed roast chicken and turkey.

A dressing made tart by the use of apples, prunes, raisins, or apricots or citrus fruit juices is particularly good with rich-flavored meat. Mashed potatoes, wild rice, or a celery dressing are popular, too. Whatever the type of dressing, it is best to make it without added fat. That's a help in these butter short days.

Because of the "makeup" of the duck and goose, the trussing and stuffing technique is simple. Wings offer no difficulty so they are untouched and legs are too short to need trussing like chicken and turkey. Fill neck end with dressing. Bring neck skin over onto back. Fasten with skewer or toothpick. Season inside with salt and pepper if desired. Fill body cavity with dressing. Do not pack. Sew or lace the opening. Loop a cord around leg ends and tighten enough to leave about 3 or 4 inches between legs. Tie.

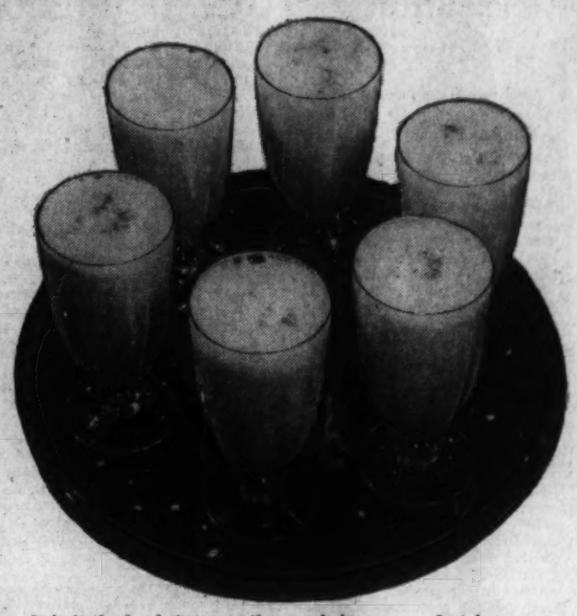
Roasting Duck and Goose

1. With fork prick through skin into the fat layers, over back, around tail, into body around wings and legs. This helps to draw out the fat.
2. Place on a rack in a shallow pan breast side up. Leave in this position throughout the cooking.
3. Roast in moderate oven, 325 to 350 degrees Fahrenheit. Do not sear. Do not add water. Do not cover.
4. Roast until nicely browned and meat is very tender. Pinch the thick portion of the drumstick meat. If it is quite soft, the duck or goose is well cooked.
5. During the last hour of roasting baste if desired: Pour off any excess fat from pan, then pour over 1 cup apple, orange or pineapple juice and ½ cup water. Baste 2 or 3 times during roasting.

If a duck or turkey is to highlight your New Year's table, remember to leave room to surround the bird with an attractive garnish. This one is completely surrounded with broiled orange fruit cups. To make cups cut tops off fruit, remove pulp and membrane and flute edges if desired. Fill shells with pieces of orange combined with seeded grapes, and apple pieces that have been dipped in lemon juice. Pour over all a little honey. Place on broiler rack 3 or 4 inches below flame. Broil only until fruit begins to brown and is heated through. Serve hot

New Year's Eggnog



It isn't the bowl that puts the punch in eggnog. Just because a punch bowl is not among your possessions is no reason for not offering New Year's callers a glass of cheer. Footed tumblers as shown here will make an attractive service for eggnog

Open house on New Year's Day is one of the oldest traditions of American hospitality. From the earliest colonial days the bowlful of frothy, fragrant eggnog has been the beverage dedicated to toasting the new year.

Back in those early days gentlemen usually carried tiny silver nutmeg cases filled with a kernel of the precious spice for grating over eggnog and other old-time food drinks.

One of the most delicious of all old-fashioned eggnog recipes stars fragrant sherry wine. This pleasant blending of eggs, cream and mellow sherry is a beverage in perfect harmony with the spirit of moderation and good taste that will mark the ushering in of 1943.

Served from a glass or silver bowl, appropriately adorned with blossoms and green branches, sherry eggnog is dramatic and festive. It's easy to prepare, too—and since the wines of California are modest in price, even a great bowlful of this drink may be served within the limits of the holiday budget.

Because eggnog is rich and satisfying, it serves well as the only refreshment for the holiday party.

EGGNOG

Beat yolks of 8 eggs until very light. Gradually add 6 cups California sherry wine. Beat until smooth. Add 1 cup sugar or ¾ cup honey and 1 quart milk. Add 1 quart cream and, finally, the stiffly beaten egg-whites. Add more sugar or honey if desired. Serve in chilled bowl, topped with grated nutmeg.

Of course, the extravagant versions of eggnog, using whipping cream, are no longer possible. Perhaps it is just as well for waistlines and digestion. But if you don't want to make your eggnog with rum and whisky, try the following recipe, for it makes for a flavor-rich magnificence.

EGGNOG

Beat separately the yolks of 6 eggs. Add ½ cup sugar to the yolks while beating. Add ¼ cup sugar to whites after they have been beaten very stiff. If corn sirup is used, gradually add 1 cup to egg-whites while beating. Mix egg-whites with yolks. Stir in 1 pint cream and 1 pint milk. Add 1 pint of whisky and 1 ounce of rum. Stir thoroughly. Serve cold with grated nutmeg. Eggnog can be made a day or so before serving and placed in the refrigerator, for it improves with age.

Cranberry Mold Good to Eat, Easy to Make

CRANBERRY SPONGE

Soften 1 envelope plain unflavored gelatin in ¼-cup cold water 5 minutes. Add to 1 cup boiling water and stir until dissolved. Add 1 tablespoon lemon juice, ¼-cup sugar, and few grains salt; mix well. Cool mixture until it begins to congeal. Combine with half of a 1-pound can cranberry sauce, and beat with rotary beater until foamy. Beat 2 egg whites until stiff, add ¼-cup sugar, and beat well; fold into cranberry mixture. Rinse eight individual molds with cold water, and pour mixture into them. Chill until firm. Unmold on dessert plates, and serve with custard sauce made with the egg yolks. Serves 8.

HAPPY NEW YEAR

Buffet Is Answer to Hostess Who Likes to Entertain at Home

Good friends and good food are the requisites of a party, especially the see-the-new-year-in-at-home kind of party. Thanks to gas rationing, we are rediscovering the joys of small neighborhood gatherings and we'll boost civilian morale with lots of them in '43.

Refreshments need never be the "same old thing"—not with the variety of table-ready meats on the market today. You can choose between a "make your own" sandwich buffet with all the makings for guests to enjoy or a simple buffet supper of table-ready meats, a hot casserole of scalloped potatoes or other vegetable, a toss salad and beverage—tea, coffee—hot mulled drinks.

For the help-yourself sandwich arrangement you'll want to provide a variety of cold meats, one or two kinds of cheese and several kinds of bread. Then there should be little dishes of mustard, horseradish, chili sauce, pickle relish and salad dressing and, of course, a bowl of well-creamed butter or margarine.

Color Additions

Sliced tomatoes, sweet onions and other relishes add color and flavor to the sandwich combinations. You may wish to provide a choice of sandwich spreads, which can be made earlier in the day. For example, cream butter or vitamin-enriched margarine and add chili sauce. Or add minced parsley and lemon juice, or minced cucumber. These spreads will add variety. Be sure to take them out of the refrigerator early so they will be soft and spreadable.

For the buffet setup and the cold-meat platter that is the center of attraction, try an assortment of cold tougue, pickle and pimento meat loaf and salami. Garnish this tray with red cranberry or tomato aspic salad molded in star-shaped or tree-shaped molds and served on green watercress.

Slices of minced ham or bologna, rolled into cornucopias, fastened with toothpicks and filled with hot or cold potato salad, will make a hit. Cottage cheese that has been mixed with chopepd chives makes a good cornucopia filling, too.

Cooked ham, braunschweigher and cervelat are possible choices. Another flavorsome trio is pot roast of beef (which can be purchased ready to serve), bologna and liver cheese. Garnish these trays with celery curls, pickles or olives, and other colorful accompaniments.

A Nautical Note

"Sailboats" can be made from small sweet pickles—and are as good to eat as they are good to look at. Cut a v-shaped wedge down the length of the pickle. Fill with softened cream cheese and insert a triangular wedge of salami or cervelat for the "sail." Place around the edge of the meat platter for a nautical touch.

Colored cheese balls are a simple and colorful garnish. Tint some of the cheese red and some green with vegetable coloring (adding just a drop at a time), then roll into balls and alternate on picks. Red cherries can be used with white cheese balls for an easy combination.

Regardless of the menu you serve or the garnish, it's wise to choose an assortment of cold meats for variety in shape, color and flavor. And it is wise, too, to buy a well-known brand of table-ready meats so you can always be sure of fine, wholesome quality and uniform good flavor.

If you'd like hot refreshments, or a suggestion for the appetizer course, dinner-size frankfurts are the answer. Cut steaming-hot, dinner-size frankfurts into halves or quarters lengthwise, impale each on a toothpick and serve around a bowl of hot savory barbecue sauce. Crisp cocktail crackers and a beverage complete this "snack" course.

Candle Wax

To remove candle wax from your tablecloth, scrape off excess with a dull knife, place fabric between white blotters and press with a warm iron. If stain remains, try sponging with a solvent.

At your New Year's Eve Party, have this extra special catsup that is different, because it's flavored with Tabasco, the "secret condiment" that makes food tastier, more fun to eat!

Montgomery Acts On Trash Collection

Survey of the metropolitan area of Montgomery County to determine whether a need exists for a county-operated trash and garbage collection system was ordered yesterday by the county commissioners at their meeting in Rockville, Md.

County Engineer William Payne was directed to make the survey and to determine the need for such service, inquiring into the wide disparity of collection costs in the area. The metropolitan area now is served by private companies.

Lacy Shaw, president of the board, said that possible action of the commissioners would await results of the survey. He said that an emergency had arisen in the Silver Spring area when the proprietor of one of the trash and garbage removal companies operating there, A. L. Rogers, had abandoned the service upon being inducted into the Army.

This condition now has been alleviated, Commissioner Shaw said, since the Wootton Refuse Co., competitive concern, had taken over the service and had provided extra trucks to care for the increased collections. Blake Merson, operator of the company, also operates the Montgomery County Refuse Co. in the Bethesda-Chevy Chase area.

Commissioner Shaw said he believed residents of the suburban area now could be assured of service at least until the survey was completed.

The commissioners received a resolution from the Montgomery County Civic Federation urging establishment prior to July 1 of such a trash and garbage collection in two suburban districts of the county. The federation urged that the system be established without further cost to the taxpayers from the 30-cent suburban district tax, which is set up to defray the costs of street lighting, repairs to streets and roads, and other improvements in the suburban districts.

Robert D. Hagner, part owner, yesterday explained that the request for rezoning of the Hagner tract on East-West Highway, near Wisconsin Avenue, primarily is for apartment house use. The additional request for rezoning to allow stores was planned to permit use of the first floor of the apartment house as a drug store, offices and possibly a dining room.

Hagner pointed out that the property is adjacent to a restaurant. The structure, however, is intended primarily as an apartment house to aid in relieving the housing congestion in Bethesda caused by the war and the location of the Naval Medical Center and Public Health Service in the area.

Hagner, a former county commissioner, said that the request for commercial zoning would be withdrawn if it were found objectionable. There would be one building and not two, as some apparently had been led to believe by the two applications. The petition is under consideration by the county commissioners.

Masons Plan Recreation For Services

A new recreation center for servicemen, operated by the Grand Lodge of Masons of Virginia in the home of Dr. and Mrs. Robert S. Barrett, 404 Duke Street, Alexandria, will be dedicated on Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock, it was announced yesterday by Dr. Barrett, grand master of Mason in Virginia.

Dr. and Mrs. Barrett have donated the first floor of their home for use as a service center for the duration, and equipment has been made available through the State Masonic lodge. A regular recreational program also will be carried out under supervision of the Masonic unit.

Speakers at Dedication

Speakers at the dedication will include Dr. Barrett, Carl H. Claudy, grand master of Masons in the District; Maj. Charles S. Coulter, executive secretary of the Masonic Service Association, and Remmie L. Arnold, chairman of the Masonic War Service Commission of Virginia.

A dedicatory prayer will be offered by the Rev. Percy Foster Hall, retired rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Alexandria and chaplain of the historic Alexandria-Washington Lodge, of which George Washington was first master.

Open to All Service Men

Although the service center is to be operated by the Masonic Service Association, Dr. Barrett said, its facilities will be open to all servicemen regardless of affiliation with the Masonic order, and members of all military services in Alexandria will be welcome at all time.

Similar service centers are being established throughout Virginia under sponsorship of the Masonic lodge, which has accepted servicemen's recreation as one of its principal projects for the current year.

Merchants Failing to Display OPA Listings to Be Reported

A number of Alexandria merchants who have failed to display official OPA listings of ceiling prices on products in stock will be reported to the State branch of the price control agency, officials of the Alexandria Rationing Board said yesterday.

In the face of "repeated warnings," the last of which was issued in the form of a circular letter on December 10, about 15 merchants have failed to comply with the regulations, it was announced, and their names will be submitted to State OPA officials this week. Further investigation will be conducted by the State office.

Local merchants, it was pointed out, have been given widespread opportunity to familiarize themselves with price ceiling regulations through a retail institute, inaugurated several months ago, as well as extensive publicity accompanying instructions from national, State and local OPA offices.

In a further effort to acquaint businessmen with the law several members of the rationing board have made voluntary visits to local firms, asking their cooperation in the program and explaining regulations requiring public posting of ceiling prices.

Ormandy and Serkin Receive Ovations at Holiday Concert

By Ray C. B. Brown

Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra on Tuesday night in Constitution Hall. Soloist: Rudolf Serkin. Program: Two Chorales: "Von Himmel hoch" and "Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme" (Bach), Piano Concerto No. 5 in E flat major (Beethoven), Symphony No. 2 in D major (Brahms).

A cold and gusty rain neither diminished the size nor dampened the enthusiasm of the audience that attended the special holiday concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra last evening in Constitution Hall. Whether it was the combination of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms in the program or the presence of Rudolph Serkin as soloist in Beethoven's fifth concerto that was the major lure is a question to be solved only by a poll of the listeners. From a mere observer's point of view, the sustained applause that brought Mr. Serkin back to the stage a half dozen times seemed to weigh the scales in his favor, although plenty of cordiality was bestowed upon Eugene Ormandy and the orchestra after the other works.

BROWN

The concert began with arrangements by Mr. Ormandy of two Bach chorales: "Vom Himmel noch" and "Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme." The former, recently completed, is the better of the two both in balance of parts and in quality of instrumentation which preserve the dignity of the chorale theme. In the latter, the manner of performance may have been more at fault than the transcriber, but the serene assurance of Philipp Nicolai's hymn tune never came clearly and steadily through the sedately gay and decorously ornamented melody with which Bach introduced and accompanied it, being overwhelmed by the volume of the string tone.

Both brilliant and sensitive was Rudolf Serkin's reading of the solo part in Beethoven's E flat major piano concerto. The brilliance flashed in the bravura passages which were played with the utmost clairity and precision, and the sensitiveness spoke in the poesy of his tone-coloring of the lyric soliloquies and in the delicacy of his pianissimo touch. As an exposition of Beethoven's piano style and as a penetrant revelation of his thoughts it was a thoroughly satisfying performance, and one's enjoyment of it was enhanced by Mr. Ormandy's handling of the orchestra in admirable cooperation.

Beethoven's last concerto is the greatest and most impressive of his works for piano and orchestra, reaching magnificence in its dimensions and in the triumphant boldness of the thematic material. The assertiveness and confidence of the first and last movements are irresistible, the creative power of the composer is at its strongest flow, and his poetic imagination in its persuasive glow in the ineffable beauty of the slow movement.

The structure of the music is enthralling in its details many of which were innovations in Beethoven's day. One of these is the surprise in the first movement when the solo instrument starts what seems to be a formal cadanza only to cut in short and enter upon an expanded coda. Another is the choice of the remote key of B major for the tranquil and lovely adagio, and a third is the sudden and mysterious transition from B major back to the original E flat major for the concluding rondo by the simple, yet always astonishing device of stepping down one degree from B natural to B flat.

Mr. Ormandy had his good reasons for offering us a second Bach-Beethoven-Brahms program within a comparatively short time, and those reasons were apparently approved by the majority of the auditors. A minority report suggests that this fare can be pleasingly and satisfactorily supplied by the National Symphony Orchestra at any time, and that the Philadelphians could enlarge our horizon and earn our gratitude by bringing us unfamiliar compositions that we might otherwise not be able to hear.

Type O Blood Needed to Save Baptist Pastor

Freedmens Hospital last night issued an emergency appeal for type O blood, needed by the Rev. William H. Jackson, Negro, lifelong resident of Washington, whose only hope of recovery, the hospital said, lies in an immediate transfusion. The Rev. Mr. Jackson, pastor of the New Bethel Baptist Church, has been a patient at Freedmen's Hospital for two months.

Anyone having type O blood is urged to contact Dr. A. L. Feldman, the attending physician. He may be reached at the hospital, Michigan 6262, at any time.

AMERICA MUST CONSERVE FOODS!

Loyal American Friends—Let us answer our Government's request to conserve food by each one pledging our loyal support to the extent we will not purchase any food commodity beyond our normal every-day requirements.

America is rich in foodstuffs. We have practically everything and plenty of it.

The rationing programs are necessary to assure equal, fair and sane distribution, but mainly to prevent hoarding by certain classes and to assure our boys in the armed forces they will be taken care of with plenty of good, substantial food.

We all realize we have a war to win; food is one of the most important weapons. Our boys must have it; our Allies must have it; we on the home front must and will cook more of fresh vegetables and bulk stuff, leaving the canned goods to go where they are needed most.

Considering these facts, no loyal American will hoard valuable foodstuff.

Ringside Table

With Mary Harris

COMING UP!—1943! Though 1942 may have deserved some roasting, 1943 will be toasted royally tomorrow night as the Year of Victory . . . And you'll find the tariffs right and reasonable even though Washington is now the world's greatest Boom Town. Night spot managements have voluntarily imposed extremely fair price ceilings on themselves for New Year's Eve. Where prices seem a little higher you'll find, on examination, that they involve such extra items as luxury dinners or breakfasts, two bands and the like.

El Patio, f'instance, offers both Little Jack Little and a bottle of champagne to all comers . . . Treasure Island gives bright and contrasted dance music by Paul Kain's orchestra and Ovanda's rumba band—plus an elaborate dinner or midnight supper, as you prefer and dimly handsome souvenirs.

The New Year's Eve party at the Willard, at a very reasonable tariff provides a well located table, a big floor show, dancing to Strickland's Willard band . . . At the Carlton and Wardman Park Hotels you can combine thrifty patriotism with celebration by buying a war bond—admission passport for you and your gal. After that you pay only standard week day prices for refreshments, get a bonus of hats and noisemakers . . .

Del Rio has solved the New Year's Eve price question cleverly with a $5 minimum that you can use in both food and drinks. Dick Himber's music, too . . . Another interesting angle is that assumed by the Victory Room, where you can pay either $5 or $8, the former including a hearty breakfast in the small hours, the latter providing a hoity-toity dinner. Shep Fields' marvelous "modern music for dancing . . . A double scale will be in effect, too, at the Balalaika, where they're asking and getting $7.50 for ringside tables, $6.50 for all others.

At the exclusive and beautiful Troika the price is $6 for a deluxe dinner, Manhattanish floor show, New Year trimmings, and dancing to music directed by Sasha Lukas. . . . The Lounge Riviera, pet spot of young Washington society, is using a modest $3 couvert on the holiday eve.

Coming downtown you'll find roaring parties at the Lotus. Dubonnet, Paul Young's and the Casino Royal—all popular spots that are jammed every night in the week and will be super-jammed on New Year's Eve. That goes for Kavakos Grill over Northeast, too, and the Louisiana in Georgetown.

If you have a gallon of gas, a kiddie car or other means of transportation, there are wonderful times to be had at the suburban spots. La Conga will be a-steam with Curbelos' Latin dance music and a Pan-Am floor show . . . At Crossroads, ever a center for colossal fun, they'll have a sliding scale—$3.50 for the party if you're at a table, $1.50 if you perch at the bar . . . River Bend's jolly New Year party will include a big home-cooked dinner, dance music by George Stein's band, lots of holiday doodads.

A roving New Year's Eve has gay possibilities, too. You just ramble in and out of the many attractive downtown bistros that make no special holiday charge. These include the Neptune Room (Dave Roberts' band), the Mayfair (Rocco Terrone music and Restaurant "400" pianist Dot Hutcheson), (Johnny Velasquez' band), the King Cole Room (Eve Knight), the Cafe Caprice (Miles Hallett's orchestra), the Anchor Room (Matt Windsor and Mary Bozley), Burt's Trans-Lux (Durward Bowersox and Sid Willoughby), the Plymouth (Michel's gypsy orchestra), the Hi Hat (two bands—Jack Neal's and Ralph Shumacher's). Also in this group belongs the Gay 90's, where the cover charge is only $1 and includes a diller of a floor show.

Everyone knows by now that the Shoreham and Mayflower Hotels are not making any special charges for New Year's Eve. But on Monday afternoon the Hamilton Hotel announced the same war time policy for its Rainbow Room. Latest news from these fronts is that the Shoreham has stopped taking reservations with the Blue Rom filled to capacity. You may have a chance at the Rainbow Room, but you'll have to produce a reservation to get in. The Mayflower hasn't taken any reservations from the start—the idea being that if you want to get in you'd better came early and keep your fingers crossed.

Jane Marlow, the pretty violinist of Restaurant "823," is now a beaming Army bride. She was recently married to Lieut. Bill Kornemann of the Army Air Corps.

COLOSSAL—THESE CHINESE. Li Tei Ming the Shoreham's new comedienne, specializes in Scotch and Irish dialect. With a Chinese accent, we presume. Li Tei has just completed a nearly four-year-run at San Francisco's Forbidden City, where she doubled in brass by executing the murals and panicking the customers.

TREATS IN EATS. The baked potatoes at Olmsted's are so big and brown and buttery that they make you realize an American baked potato is one of the world's finest foods. . . . Sweetbreads with a delicate Madeira sauce are a last-time-I-saw-Paris special in the Trianon on Seventeenth Street. . . . Chicken Jambolaya is among the menu of the Stables on Riverside heavenly items you'll find on the Drive. . . .

Some Do—Some Don't Make New Year's Resolutions

TIMELY PERSONALITIES

Younger Set Still Finds It a Gay Season

Hope Ridings Miller

Whether You Keep Them or Not—Why Not Make Those New Year's Resolutions? Here Are a Few for the Record

"I never make New Year's resolutions," smugly observed a well-plushed dowager as she sipped one more eggnog at an informal gathering yesterday afternoon. "No use in making them," she went on, expounding the obvious "unless you can keep them."

"I make 'em anyway," put in my favorite Admiral, "and whether I keep them makes little difference. You see," he added, with a twinkle, "it's just another link in proof that 'The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak.'"

Looking back over the long list of resolutions I published last year, and the year before, the angle that the flesh is weak seems pretty obvious. But perhaps I tossed off too many each time; didn't consider carefully enough before I put them into print; expected a bit too much of myself and the celebrities I cover; and forgot to remember half of them (the resolutions, I mean) a week after I made them.

Anyway, here goes—for better or worse; for keeping or forgetting, for further proof that the spirit, at least is willing, I resolve that for 1943 I shall:

Continue to play up personalities who are helping us win this war; and to play down those concerned chiefly with their own personal, political or social advancement. I shall maintain my department's blackout—or dimout, at least—on detailed accounts of all purely social events; all parties, in other words, with no further significance than a listing of who was there and what was worn.

Manage to meet more newcomers to Washington, and not devote my entire time to those who have been around, and written about, ever since the New Deal was really new . . . or even longer.

Cease being a trial to my friends each time someone mentions the war. I shall try to bear in mind that other people have just as much at stake in it as I do, and there's no use in any of us being sorry for ourselves and emulating Gauden's "Grief" each time we remember the sacrifices we're in for.

Quit making excuses to myself, and to other members of the publicity committee of the Stage Door Canteen. I shall do my weekly stint there, no matter what else comes up. (You can count on it, Mrs. Langner, I'll be there next Wednesday.)

Smile serenely and say sweetly, "Why, I wouldn't think of it," each time a Person of Importance makes some inane observation and then adds, sotto voce, "But don't put that in the paper!"

Refrain from taking issue with people who know a lot more about deciding factors in the war than I ever will; and I shall, positively stop urging everybody I meet to speculate on:

(a) When the war will end.

(b) Who the next Presidential candidates may be.

(c) The whys and wherefores of point rationing.

Stop bemoaning the fate that kept me from being as tall, gracious and entertaining as Mrs. Paul McNutt; as regal as Mrs. Joseph Davies; as chic as Mme. Espil and Mrs. Edward Finkenstaedt; as witty as Mrs. Thurman Arnold and Mrs. George Barnett; as popular as Mrs. Cordell Hull; as beautiful as Mrs. Patrick Hurley, Mme. Hassan, Mrs. Lister Hill and Mrs. Hugo Black; as brilliant as Mrs. Adolf Berle; as pretty and talented as Clare Boothe Luce, and as vitally alive and interested in everything that goes on as Mrs. Roosevelt.

Finally, I shall—I hope—continue finding Washington, even the mad, wartime Washington, as interesting, exciting and stimulating as ever . . . and be even more thankful for the privilege of watching it in this historic phase, with a press pass for a ringside seat . . . at one of the world's greatest shows.

Lieut. Simpson and Bride Return From Honeymoon

Former Mary Berry Wed to Member Of Engineer's Corps

Returned to Arlington, following a brief wedding trip, are Lieut. Ewing Gordon Simpson, U. S. A., and his bride, the former Miss Mary Mercedes Berry. Dances Mark Calendar of Younger Set

As the year 1943 looms on the horizon, young folk will be going off to the wars, back to school, or to jobs on the home front.

With this thought in mind, girls and boys this holiday season are getting together perhaps for the last time for a final fling at gayety.

Laughlin Phillips, son of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Phillips, a freshman at Yale University, entertained a group of about 80 of his friends at a dance given last evening at his home on Foxhall Road. Mrs. Benjamin Cain gave a tea dance yesterday afternoon at the 1925 F Street Club for her daughter, Miss Jane Randolph Cain, and there was another party Monday night—a dance given by Mr. and Mrs. Lyle E. Hutchison for their daughters, Miss Virginia Hutchison and Miss Claudia Hutchison.

Mrs. Cain had invited about 200 young people for her party yesterday, including a number from Baltimore, former classmates of her daughter at the Greenwood School, Ruxton, Md. Miss Sally Hundley and Miss Beverly Cochran were among those coming over from Baltimore for the fete.

Assisting the hostess at the tea table were Mrs. Frederick H. Brooke, Mrs. Blaise de Sibour, Mrs. Emmons Smith, Mrs. Harold Boyer and Mrs. Henry D. Flood. Miss Cain since finishing school has joined the AWVS and is taking a secretarial course on the side.

The Wesley Heights Club was the scene of the merry dance given by Mr. and Mrs. Hutchison who entertained about 400 of the younger set, many of them young men in uniform.

At a ceremony held just before the luncheon, in the office of Vice President Wallace, General Arnold and Colonel Gorrell accepted the Collier Trophy on behalf of the Army Air Forces and America's commercial air lines. The National Aeronautic Association selected the two groups for the award because of their accomplishments in the Ferry Command during 1941.

Among the guests at the luncheon were Vice President Wallace, Mr. Robert A. Lovett, Assistant Secretary of War for Air; Maj. Gen. Harold L. George, Maj. Gen. George E. Stratemeyer; Maj. Gen. Many Wedding Ceremonies Accent Holiday Schedule

The holiday season, this year as always has been accented by dozens of weddings in Washington and nearby towns. For the most part the ceremonies are simple and in almost every instance, this year, the bridegroom wears the uniform of a branch of the armed forces.

Meade Memorial Church in White Post, Clarke County, Va., was the scene of the wedding of Miss Constance Figg and Daniel Alvin Wood on December 26. The bride's father, the Rev. James A. Figg, rector of the church, performed the ceremony.

The bride, given in marriage by her brother, James Figg, wore a brown dress with matching accessories and a corsage of white gardenias. Miss Polly Green was the maid of honor.

Mr. Wood, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Knapp Wood of Reading, Conn., had as his best man his brother, Frederick Starr Wood. Ushers were John Winslow Bishop of Ottawa, Ill., and Alexander McKay Smith of White Post.

A Christmas Day wedding of interest here took place at the Warner Memorial Presbyterian Church in Kensington, Md., when Miss Anne Thomas was married to Capt. Morgan L. Tenny, U. S. A.

After a short trip following their wedding Saturday at the Rockville Christian Church, Mr. and Mrs. John Lembach will be at home in Washington, where the bridegroom is stationed.

The bride, who was before her marriage Miss Mary Marguerite Wilson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Wilson 2d, of Rockville, Md., was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of brocaded satin with long basque bodice and sweetheart neckline. Year Whirls to Close In Flurry of Weddings

Maj. and Mrs. Frederick H. Walton, jr., who were married recently in Washington, snapped at the Holly Inn in sunny Pinehurst, N. C., where they are honeymooning. Mrs. Walton is the former Miss Barbara Ramseyer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Ramseyer of Washington.

Ensign Hurd, Bride, Leave For Florida

Ensign Charles Gray Hurd is back on duty following his wedding on Saturday, December 26, and his bride, the former Miss Margaret Bowyer Hill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William George Hill, will make her home in Miami, Fla.

The wedding was originally planned for December 24 in Bethlehem Chapel of the Washington Cathedral. Owing to the illness of the bride the date was postponed and the simple ceremony was performed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hill. The Rev. Charles Warner, rector of St. Alban's Church, officiated. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Willis Hurd of Silver Spring, Md.

Mr. Hill gave his daughter in marriage. She wore an ivory satin gown made with a long-sleeved bodice edged about the neck and sleeves with family Pointe de Venice lace. The full skirt ended in a train, and her ivory tulle veil was held with a cap of Pointe de Venice lace. She carried a bouquet of white camellias, white orchids and sweet peas.

Little Mary Truxtun Hill was her sister's flower girl and only attendant. She wore pale pink starched chiffon fashioned with a long skirt trimmed with bands of pleating edged in pale blue velvet. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet of sweetheart roses. Mr. Hurd was best man for his son.

Alma Francke Becomes Bride

Dr. and Mrs. Albert Donald Maizels, whose wedding took place in Washington on Sunday, will make their home at the Marlyn apartments.

The former Miss Alma Francke, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin S. Francke, and Dr. Maizels, son of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Maizels of this city, were married at the Mayflower Hotel at a 2 o'clock afternoon ceremony, with the Rev. Solomon H. Metz officiating.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and her only attendant was Mrs. Ezra Gratz, sister of the bridegroom.

Charles J. Brand on Tour Of South American Nations

It was flying down to Rio for Charles J. Brand this holiday season, who arrived in the Brazilian capital yesterday for a swing through several of the South American countries.

Going by way of the east coast, Mr. Brand will return to Washington the end of next month by the west coast. He will study, so far as his time permits, cotton and coffee production in the vicinity of Sao Paulo, Brazil, livestock and alfalfa production and fertilization practices in the vicinity of Buenos Aires, and will attend the fourth South American Congress of Chemistry in Santiago from January 5 to January 12. This is at the invitation of the Ambassador of Chile, Rodolfo Michels. Mr. Brand also plans to visit the nitrate pampas in northern Chile and the ancient terrace farming operations near Lima, Peru.

Mr. Brand, who is executive secretary and treasurer of the National Fertilizer Association, will devote the major part of his time to studying the nitrate industry, which is of immense importance as a war and postwar problem. This is not his first reporting trip, for in 1923 he reported on the commerce of nitrate of soda on the continent and in Great Britain, and in 1929 on the synthetic nitrogen industry of the continent.

E. H. DeCelle And Bride on Wedding Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. DeCelle, whose marriage took place on Saturday, are in New York on a brief honeymoon before Mr. DeCelle reports to Camp Lee, Va., January 6, for induction in the Armed Forces.

The bride is the former Miss Naomi Eleanor Brooks of Lyon Village, daughter of Mrs. Jesse Pittman Brooks of Washington. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Joseph A. DeCelle, also of Washington.

The ceremony was held in the rectory of St. Anne's Church, Washington, with the Rev. Russell A. Phelan officiating. A wedding supper was held afterward at the Watergate Inn.

For her wedding the bride wore a winter white costume with brown accessories and a corsage of orchids. Miss Betty Hoff, her only attendant, was in pastel green and wore a corsage of Talisman roses. Whatley Lemons of Arlington, Va., served as best man.

Mrs. Cecil Norton Broy, wife of United States Consul Charles C. Broy, will entertain at supper on New Year's Eve in honor of Mrs. H. Robert Wise. Mrs. Wise has just arrived in Washington to join her husband, who was made branch manager of The Washington Post a short time ago.

Supper will be served at 11 o'clock and the guests, arriving earlier in the evening, will be entertained with a program of informal music, including a "community sing" of American folk songs and a selection of English tunes which Mrs. Broy brought back from London.

Mrs. Broy has spent several years in London, where her husband has twice been stationed and was presented at the Court of St. James's along with the Duchess of Windsor in June, 1931.

Award to Be Presented At Tonight's Premiere

Navy League Honors 'Stand By for Action;' Washington Beauty Tackles Career Hard Way; Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

ANN SHERIDAN

As one of the highlights of the "global premiere," a plaque awarded Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer by the Navy League of the United States for the production of an authentic picture of the naval fighting forces in action will be accepted by Orville O. Dull, coproducer of the film, on behalf of the studio. Samuel E. M. Crocker, vice president of the league and a member of its executive committee, will make the presentation.

Mr. Dull will be a special guest at the Washington inaugural, along with members of the President's Cabinet, 17 admirals and a long list of notables in Washington's official and social life.

The award given to the studio, the producers and the cast—headed by Robert Taylor, Brian Donlevy, Charles Laughton and Walter Brennan—reads as follows.

"The Navy League of the United States presents this award to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for their stirring and timely production, 'Stand By for Action,' which vividly portrays the skill, courage and tradition of the United States Navy and pays deserved tribute to its valiant fighting men."

It is worth stressing in the interest of the general public that tonight's premiere is not exclusively an invitational affair. The guest list will absorb only a comparatively small fraction of the total seating capacity of the Palace. All other seats are on sale to the public at the Capitol, Palace and Columbia boxoffices at no increase in the regular scale of prices. As coproducer of "Stand By for Action," Director Robert Z. Leonard outdid even himself in incorporating every element or popular appeal in the blazing action of his picture. It is being given simultaneous premieres in Boston, Providence, Norfolk, San Francisco, San Diego and Seattle, all great naval centers in this country, and, unless the "global" aspects of the occasion have been eliminated since the first announcements, in Sydney, Australia.

Comes a Letter From the Coast

Perhaps, after all, Producer Walter Wanger knew what he was talking about when he observed that Helen Pender, young Washington beauty cast in a minor part in his Technicolor production of "Arabian Nights," had a bright future in the cinema. When we reported his sage remarks 'way back yonder, we were fearful that it might be just another mimeograph of Studio Stock Letter No. 1,913,014, sent out as a matter of routine for home town consumption. That notion has been pretty thoroughly dispelled by a letter from Miss Pender herself, reading in part as follows:

"Thank you very much for giving me that nice write-up in your column. Since working in 'Arabian Nights,' I have had several offers of similar showgirl parts, but instead of taking them, I am studying with a very fine dramatic teacher every day and also have been working at the Actors' Lab., under the direction of J. Edward Bromberg, the character actor. I was with Josephine Hutchinson, Columbia's coach, and she has been very helpful and encouraging.

"In this way I hope to be able to do justice to real acting roles.

Just thought you old friends and neighbors would like to know.

It is, of course, a scurvy trick to play on the drayma desks, but the Warner boys are opening their new bills at BOTH the Earle and Metropolitan Theaters on Thursday this week, instead of the customary Friday. It seems there's a New Year or something coming up. The Earle's attraction, as everybody must know by now, will be Jack Benny and Ann Sheridan in the screen version of the Kaufman-Hart stage hit, "George Washington Slept Here," with Dave Apollon headlining the stage bill. The Metropolitan's screen feature has not been announced, but it should not be hard to guess. Or maybe I'm wrong. Thursday midnight will be celebrated at the Earle by that big, double, reserved-seat whoop-de-doo at $2.20 in the orchestra and $1.65 in the balcony—with a sellout already in sight.

'This Little Hand,' at National, Ace Films Usher in the New Year

"THIS LITTLE HAND" comes to the National Theater for one week, further to prove that "the female of the species is more deadly than the male." An all-female cast is featured in Producer A. H. Woods' latest melodrama, which finds a group of sorority girls on a weekend indulging in a little gentle homicide. Adele Longmire, K. T. Stevens and Barbara Bel Geddes head the dramatis personae. Opens Monday.

Earle

"GEORGE WASHINGTON SLEPT HERE.' "What a good boy am I," or words to that effect, says Jack Benny as he comes up with one of the decided plums of the season in the form of the screen version of the hit play of Kaufman and Hart. Ann Sheridan is costarred in the story of the city folk who buy a run-down country home. The first stage show of 1943 features Dave Appollon and the Ross Sisters. Opens Thursday.

Capitol

"WHISTLING IN DIXIE." Red Skelton bolsters his sagging spirits by puckering up his lips and blowing, in another screwball mystery-comedy. Ann Rutherford is a partner to the frustrated nuptials which never come off due to a slight case of murder. George Bancroft, Guy Kibbee and "Rags" Ragland are credited with important assists. Henny Youngman is featured in the stage show with his own brand of rapid-fire comedy. Opens Thursday.

RKO-Keith's

"ONCE UPON A HONEYMOON." Ginger Rogers keeps one step ahead of Cary Grant, who is one step ahead of the invading Nazis, in a love story that carries well across wartorn Europe. Chief problem facing Cary is to persuade Ginger to unmarry a German baron, played by Walter Slezak. Held over.

Palace

"STAND BY FOR ACTION." A gala premiere tonight marks the opening of this action-packed tribute to our Navy. Star of the picture is really an over-age destroyer, assisted by Brian Donlevy, Charles Laughton, Robert Taylor and Walter Brennan. Babies and bombardments are the two extremes which try the mettle of ship and crew. Regular run starts Thursday.

Columbia

"FOR ME AND MY GAL." Songs of the last war and snappy dances are featured in this yarn about vaudeville hoofers who strive to reach the mecca of all entertainers of a by-gone year—the Palace Theater in New York. Judy Garland, Gene Kelly and George Murphy are involved as a trio whose careers are interrupted by the conflict. Opens Thursday.

Little

HEDDA HOPPER

'Marines' Has Situation in Hand!

Hollywood, Calif., Dec. 29.—The Pete Smith short, "Marines in the Making," undoubtedly will get an Academy Award. In every way it lives up to its title — shows the real training which makes the Marines so tough, and it'll have you gasping. It was done at the Marine Base in Chicago, with the Windy City's skyline as a background, and mighty pretty it is, too.

BETTY GRABLE

An 18-year-old marine gives the "Creed of the Rifle," and he does it beautifully. When the short was shown, Louis B. Mayer turned to Everett Crosby, who was sitting beside him. Said Louis, "Get me that man; he's a young Gable." Everett replied, "I'm sorry, Uncle Sam got him first." "Hmmm," said Louis, "keep your eye on him and bring him to me when war's over."

Here is the creed: "This is my rifle. There are many like it, but this one is mine. My rifle is my best friend. It is my life. In battle my rifle without me is useless. Without my rifle I am useless. I must fire my rifle true. I must shoot straighter than my enemy, who is trying to kill me. I must shoot him before he shoots me. I will. I will know my rifle as I know myself. I will learn its weakness, strength, parts, sights and barrel. I will ever guard it against the ravages of weather and damage as I will ever guard my arms, my legs, my eyes and my heart. I will keep my rifle clean and ready. We will become part of each other. We will. Before God, I swear this creed. So be it. Until victory is ours. And peace again rules the world."

That row which had reached a boiling point between Columbia and Penny Singleton has slowed down to a simmer. Penny decided to resume her "Blondie" role, and Jeff Donnell's test was called off.

It's about time—Sam Goldwyn did it. He made William Cameron Menzies, who's been our best production designer for years, an associate producer.

Ensign Bob Stack tells me the dim-out in San Francisco is so effective you have to drive by Braille.

Bob Taplinger will be a lieutenant in the Navy January 1 in the incentive division, whatever that is.

Pasadena city elders are up in arms over a song Janet Blair sings in "Something to Shout About." Seems she refer to that lovely city as the place where the right people go to die.

Yankees' prize pitcher, Red Ruffing, who usually spends his holiday golfing here, played only one round on his first day—found he couldn't relax, had to do something for the war. So Mr. Ruffing's now working at the Vultee Aircraft Co., and did you know that he has only two toes on his right foot?

First time I've known a Betty Davis set to be closed, but "Old Acquaintance" has done it. Not that Bette's feuding with Miriam Hopkins, but Miriam, who took a role knowing it was anything but sweet and light, insists upon playing it that way.

From Washington came word that Comdr. Jack Ford has been in hospital in Africa. Nothing serious. His wife had a cable saying he's well, hoping she's happy.

"MR. AND MRS. AMERICA" tells the story, via March of Time, of what Americans on the home front are doing to back up our fighting men. "College At War," makes a tour of principal colleges that are busy fitting students to become officers and leaders in the war effort. A Disney cartoon and the newsreel will complete the bill. Opens Friday.

LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Films Sign War's Youngest Hero

Hollywood, Dec. 29 (INS).—America's youngest hero, Pvt. George William Holle of the Marines, has just been signed to a five-year contract by Warner Brothers. Jack Malloy, editor of the Chicago Herald-American, to whom Jack Warner, now in Hot Springs, Ark., talked, helped arrange the deal, which, of course, had to be sanctioned by his natural guardian, his mother. Warners not only intend to make one picture with the young Marine but they will star him in a Marine movie.

According to Malloy, the Holle youngster is very handsome and although only 13, looks much older.

Bette Davis must smile to herself when she hears that "The Man Who Played God," one of George Arliss' most important hits, is to be remade on the Warner Lot with Sydney Greenstreet. Bette, in those days, was an ingenue—an imitation of all the blonde glamour girls. But Arliss saw something in her and asked that she play opposite him.

She has certainly come a long way.

While Twentieth Century-Fox was looking high and low for a story for Director Alfred Hitchcock solved the problem. He the David Selznick deal, Hitchcock solved the problem. He brought his own story, "Life Boat," to the studio and it is such a thrilling, up-to-the-minute drama that William Goetz at once ordered a treatment written. It deals with the men of a Merchant Marine ship and a Nazi submarine, who were thrown into the ocean at the same time with a single life boat between them. The struggle for the life boat and the man-to-man fight furnishes one of those super-duper Hitchcock plots.

Gossip From Gotham

New York, Dec. 29.

A short time ago, Alexander Woollcott was a visitor at the White House. While he was there, his host suddenly decided to spend a few days at Hyde Park. The fact that the President was absent did not disturb Woollcott's occupancy. In fact, once he discovered that the President was away, Woollcott proceeded to invite, as his own guest at the White House, a friend whose branch of the family has been opposed to the President—young Quentin Roosevelt.

MARLENE DIETRICH

Whenever William Randolph Hearst visited the White House he always adhered strictly to the rule book and accorded the then President the respect due a sovereign. Hearst believed, for instance, that no one should speak to the President until the visitor first is addressed by him . . . Once, he and Mrs. Hearst were ushered into the White House and sat with the President for hours on end—sat there silently, waiting for the Chief Executive to start the conversation. Mrs. Hearst finally departed, unable to stand the long silence, leaving her husband with his firm determination to say nothing until the President spoke first. But it was No Contest, for the President, at that time, was the Silent One—Coolidge.

Ken Kling, the cartoonist, introduced his son to Al Smith, and said: "My boy never can become President of the United States." Smith asked: "But why not?" And Kling explained: "The Wet Issue" . . . Marlene Dietrich should be credited with "Additional Dialogue" in her new film, "Pittsburgh." In the scene which required a patriotic speech, Miss Dietrich merely delivered the speech she's been making on her recent bond-tour . . . Edmund Gwenn was too ill to go on in "The Three Sisters" the other night. Guthrie McClintic, the director, went on in his stead. McClintic has directed Ruth Gordon in four plays, Judith Anderson in four plays and Katharine Cornell in more than six plays. But this was the first time these stars of "The Three Sisters" ever saw him act.

John Kieran, who has been the N. Y. Times' sports columnist for many years, asked the editors for permission to write a general column, in which he could employ the vast store of knowledge he has accumulated through the years. The Times' editors didn't believe he was serious about it. Kieran therefore went to the N. Y. Sun—and his new column of generalities will begin in that newspaper on January 4 . . . Mike Jacobs, the sports promoter, presented tailored uniforms to three soldiers as Christmas gifts—to Joe Louis, Billy Conn and Sportswriter Al Buck . . . The girls around town are lamenting, "We wish Santa Claus had left us stockings, instead of filling 'em."

Moritz Rosenthal, the renowned pianist, celebrated his eightieth birthday here last week. At the birthday celebration, one of his friends told of the day when he took Rosenthal to a concert at which a man named Green was the soloist . . . After the concert, he asked Rosenthal: "Well, what did you think of it?" . . . "Green," replied the pianist, "is restful to the eye—but not to the ear."

Col. Moe "The Gimp" Snyder, the former husband of Singer Ruth Etting, is in Chicago now. He was released from the California jail to which he had been sent for firing a gun at Miss Etting and her present husband . . . The colonel still is a colorful figure. He approached one of his friends, a noted writer, and asked him to write something for him. "I'm going to phone Ruthie," the colonel explained, "and I'd like you to write something which I could say to her, to patch it all up" . . . "You mean you want me to ghost-write a telephone conversation?" said the writer. "I don't think it'll work. Ruth's ghost-writer has an easier job—just to write 'No.'"

Cole Porter, who's been in Boston with his new show which Michael Todd is producing, now has two bodyguards—because of threats made by a discharged employe of the show . . . Joe Frisco, who was to have started with the new 18 Club show on January 6, will start instead on December 30. "I didn't," explained Frisco, "want to start the New Year jobless" . . . A zoot-suiter, who accidentally saw Chekov's "The Three Sisters," reported to his colleagues at the Wivel: "The story is the same kind the Andrews Sisters get in the movies—but the jive is all Russian" . . . When Victor Mature and Rita Hayworth were here, eight Coast Guardsmen asked him if they could get to meet her. "Call her at the Pierre," Mature told them, "and she'll find time to say 'Hello.'" That night Mature was delayed in visiting her because of the 45-minute blackout. The eight Coast Guardsmen were luckier. They were at the Pierre, getting her autograph when the blackout began.

President Likes Her Poem

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

SUCCESS—The first poem Helen Griffin of St. Louis sent to a newspaper attracted the attention of President and Mrs. Roosevelt who liked it so well they requested copies. The poem about rationing was written in the meter of "The Night Before Christmas." It was printed on Page 1 of The Post last Saturday

U. S. Supervisor's Job Largely Getting Ideas, Flemming Says

Ninety per cent of the job of a supervisor of Federal workers is getting ideas for more efficient work from those under them, Arthur S. Flemming, Civil Service Commissioner, told a meeting of Society for Personnel Administration at the Interior Department auditorium last night.

It is necessary to bring supervisors to the point where they feel it a moral responsibility to see to it that these ideas are in turn presented to the proper administrative authorities, and that credit for the ideas go to the person originating them, Mr. Flemming said.

An organization that was staffed with that kind of supervisory personnel would eliminate red tape and paper work, and would be an organization that would utilize its personnel to the fullest.

If there was a supervisor who worked himself out of a job by adopting that philosophy, the Commissioners wanted to know about him for he can readily be placed without any difficulty, the Commissioner remarked.

Previous statements of the Commission that this move would be necessary have been futile, he said.

Dismissal Of Suit Against Dies Is Upheld

The United States Court of Appeals yesterday upheld the action of a lower Federal court in dismissing a $100,000 libel suit brought against Representative Martin Dies (Democrat) of Texas, by J. S. Potts, Richmond, Va., trading as the Southern Progress Publishing Co.

The suit, previously considered and dismissed by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, was the outgrowth of statements in a publication by Dies entitled "The Trojan Horse in America," on October 22, 1940.

The appelant sued Dies, head of the House Committee Investigating American Activities, on the grounds that certain statements in the publication implied that the magazine Southern Progress published by Potts "was and is of Nazi character."

Teacher-Pay Hearing To Be Sought

The Joint Legislative Council of Educational Organizations of the District Public Schools will seek a hearing with Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, on proposed legislation which would increase teachers' salary scales, it was announced yesterday.

Recently the Board of Education directed Superintendent Ballou to undertake a broader revision of the existing schedule, and the council will present suggested changes to him.

No date for the conference has been set, but it is expected that it will be held when schools reopen following the Christmas holidays.

The council met last weekend to revise the present salary schedule, which has been in effect since 1924, in an effort to formulate a plan which would meet with congressional approval. Previous attempts by the group to introduce legislation for salary adjustments, in hearings on the Ramspeck and Mead bills, were unsuccessful.

Daniel B. Lloyd, legislative chairman of the District Education Association, is chairman of the commission, which includes Walter S. Griest, president of the superintendent's advisory council; Margaret R. Pepper, Elementary Principals' Association; Agnes K. Tweedie, High School Teachers' Association; George Murray, Columbian Education Association; James T. Gallahorn, Junior High School Teachers' Association, and Mildred Finlon, president, Elementary Teachers' Association.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborne

"We play a set game, family against family each week," writes Contributor F. H. S. of Wilmington, Del., in submitting a hand which he labels "grand slam butchered."

"After playing all evening, my wife and I were down about 24 points, but he have a rule we never start a new rubber after midnight, and the last rubber is always a drawn-out affair. This hand was dealt at 1:15 a. m. and was the last hand, as it was a lay-down grand slam at no trump or hearts and we knew we had to make a grand slam to recover our losses. Yet with this thought in mind we did not bid it.

"With a small-slam bid, we ended the evening one point minus; with a grand slam we would have been on the plus side."

The cards, with North-South vulnerable and North dealer:

♠ A K 10 7
♢ Q 9 4
♣ A 10 9

♡ A K J 10
♣ K Q J 8

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1♠	Pass	2♡	Pass
4NT	Pass	5♢	Pass
6♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Since it is a family affair, we would think F. H. S. would be delighted to close an unprofitable evening with a winning hand and let the matter drop there. Of course grand slams do not come so often that they can be lightly forgotten. In considering the bidding, North was definitely timid, or tired, or both. Certainly with a forcing bid from her partner, a fit in his suit, her aces and king make it merely a matter of six or seven. Here is one way to get there, sticking as close to the original bidding as possible:

North	East	South	West
1♠	Pass	3♡	Pass
3♠	Pass	4♡	Pass
4NT	Pass	5♢	Pass
5NT	Pass	6♡	Pass
7♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Antitrust Laws Still in Effect, Arnold Warns

Thurman Arnold, head of the Justice Department's anti-trust division, says there is a widespread but erroneous notion among some businessmen that the anti-trust laws have been suspended or abrogated for the duration of the war.

While to a "certain and well-defined extent our anti-trust laws have had to yield to the emergency," Arnold said in a letter to Chairman Patman (Democrat), Texas, of the House Small Business Committee, they have by no means been permanently discarded.

The letter, dealing generally with the problems of small business, was made public in part yesterday by Patman.

The department's policy, Arnold explained, was to suspend proceedings under antitrust statutes when either the Secretary of War or of the Navy believed prosecution would interfere with the war effort. The War Production Board's power to grant certain exemptions from the laws, Arnold added, has been exercised sparingly and cautiously.

Otherwise, Arnold asserted, the antitrust laws "are fully as operative and effective today as they have ever been," with the division "especially vigilant to see that the war effort is not used as a pretense for their evasion."

Despite precautions, Arnold declared, there will be casualties among small business concerns and "many thousands" of them "are being crowded out of existence."

In the process of building an armed force quickly and effectively after the bombing of Pearl Harbor, he said, "giant institutions . . . were literally flooded with large orders" and the small business unit, "rightly or wrongly, was largely ignored . . ."

As major contributing causes of the economic condition of small business, Arnold listed the shortage of basic raw materials, competition for and "maldistribution of" manpower, the "congestion of Government procurement and purchasing and their channeling into the large units of industry" and the orders of limitation, exclusion and freezing issued by war agencies.

170 Poles Slain In Single Town, Government Says

London, Dec. 29. (AP).—The Polish government in exile reported today that in a new Nazi campaign of extermination in Poland 170 Poles had been slain in a single village, Kitow, where the peasants showed resistance to German overlordship.

The report said there had been 107 public hangings at towns in central Poland.

"One of the reasons for this new wave of terror and mass deportation is the Germans' fear of the consequences of losing the war," the report declared.

Deputy Prime Minister Stanislaw Mikolajczky said that in the district of Zamos alone 54 villages had been denuded of their Polish population and that Polish owners had been evicted from 10,000 farms. He said children under 6 were deported to Germany, and the sick, crippled and weak were "removed to an unknown destination."

"And we know that means death," he asserted.

Senators Have Varied Opinions On Wallace Talk

By the Associated Press

A supporter of the Administration, Senator Guffey (Democrat) of Pennsylvania praised the Monday night "world council" speech of Vice President Wallace yesterday, while Senator Nye (Republican) of North Dakota, long an opponent of Administration foreign policy, observed sarcastically:

"It must be very nice to be able to day-dream so beautifully without having to be at all realistic."

Senator Guffey said it was "a great constructive speech, the best speech the Vice President has made to my knowledge."

Senator Wheeler (Democrat) of Montana said the people of this country must put a stop to "bureaucracy and regimentation" or face the prospect of losing democracy. Wheeler said he did not believe a regimentation of free enterprise would aid in permanent peace.

Floods Kill 2, Damage Land In Alabama

By the Associated Press

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 29.—Small streams receded and larger ones spread over more territory today as Alabama counted two dead and many thousands of dollars in damage in floods in the northern and western portions of the State.

A mountain flood which trapped his automobile on the highway between Birmingham and Childersburg sometime Sunday night brought death to Private First Class John M. Kellogg, stationed at Fort Benning, Ga., and John M. Thompson, 78, Birmingham, drowned when he stumbled into deep water from his porch.

Kellogg's body was found after the wreckage of his car was seen as the waters receded yesterday.

The Atlanta-Birmingham line of the Southern Railway remained out today, but other highways and railroads in north Alabama were back in service. Traffic which normally moves over the Atlanta-Birmingham line was being diverted to two other railroads.

At Gadsen, where several hundred residents of low residential areas were moved to higher ground yesterday, flood waters were receding.

Operations at the Gadsden plant of the Republican Steel Corp. were hampered by high water, and the two blast furnaces were taken out of production. Open hearth furnaces continued to operate, but on a reduced production rate, and some finishing units were placed under slow schedules.
